

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

WIDENER

HN JRJE X

Ital 4870.9

HARVARD COLLEGE LIBRARY

FROM THE FUND OF
FREDERICK ATHEARN LANE
OF NEW YORK

Class of 1849

The Story of Venice

0

The Mediæval ❖ Town Series

- ASSISI.* [3rd Edition.
By LINA DUFF GORDON.
- BRUGES.† [2nd Edition.
By ERNEST GILLIAT-SMITH.
- CAIRO.†
By STANLEY LANE-POOLE.
- CHARTRES.†
By CECIL HEADLAM.
- CONSTANTINOPLE.* [2nd Edition.
By WILLIAM H. HUTTON.
- FERRARA.†
By ELLA NOYES.
- FLORENCE.† [4th Edition.
By EDMUND G. GARDNER.
- LONDON.†
By H. B. WHEATLEY.
- MOSCOW.* [2nd Edition.
By WIRT' GERRARE.
- NUREMBERG.* [4th Edition.
By CECIL HEADLAM.
- PERUGIA.* [5th Edition.
By MARGARET SYMONDS and LINA DUFF GORDON.
- PRAGUE.*
By COUNT LÜTZOW.
- ROME.† [4th Edition.
By NORWOOD YOUNG.
- ROUEN.† [2nd Edition.
By THEODORE A. COOK.
- SEVILLE.†
By WALTER M. GALLICHAN.
- SIENA.†
By EDMUND G. GARDNER.
- TOLEDO.* [2nd Edition.
By HANNAH LYNCH.
- VERONA.† [2nd Edition.
By ALETHEA WIEL.

The price of those volumes marked ( are 3s. 6d. net in cloth,
4s. 6d. net in leather; of those marked (†), 4s. 6d. net in cloth, 5s. 6d. net in leather.*

Alinari, Florence

S. Laccaria.. Madonna enthroned and four Saints. by Giovanni Bellini.

The Story of Venice
 by Thomas Qkey Illustrated by Nelly Erichsen

50

London: J. M. Dent & Co.
Aldine House, 29 and 30 Bedford Street
*Covent Garden, W.C. * * 1905*

Ital 4870.9

Lane fund

"Italie is the face of Europe : Venice the eie of Italie."

113
2153
113
8

All rights reserved

In memory of old days I dedicate this book to my friends and fellow pilgrims of the Toynbee Travellers' Club

T. O.

PREFACE

THE History of Venice is the history of a State unparalleled in Europe for permanence and stability. For centuries Venice occupied that position of maritime supremacy now held by Great Britain, and time was when an English king was fain to crave the loan of a few warships to vindicate his rights in France. The autonomy of the Venetian Republic so imposed on men's minds that it was regarded as in the very nature of things, and even so acute an observer as Voltaire wrote in the Dictionnaire Philosophique, less than three decades before her fall: "Venice has preserved her independence during eleven centuries, and I flatter myself will preserve it for ever."

In the course of our story we have freely drawn from the old chronicles, while not neglecting modern historians, chiefest of whom is the Triestine Hebrew scholar, Samuele Romanin. Indeed, all that has been written on Venetian history during the past forty years does but increase our admiration for the imperturbable industry and sagacious judgment of the author of the Storia Documentata di Venezia, to whom our heaviest debt is due.

The history, criticism and appreciation of Venetian architecture and Venetian painting are indissolubly associated with the genius of Ruskin, and notwithstanding some waywardness of judgment and spoilt-child philosophy, his writings are, and ever will be, the classic works on the subject. Among more recent authorities we are indebted to the publications of Berenson, Bode, Burckhardt, Ludwig, Morelli, and Saccardo.

Preface

For purposes of description we have divided the city and outlying islands of the Venetian lagoon into twenty sections, arranged rather with regard to their relative historical and artistic importance than to strict topographical considerations, although these have not been lost sight of. In our quality of cicerone we have drawn from an acquaintance of the city at various times extending over a period of twenty years: more detailed and practical information may be sought in the admirable guide-books of Baedeker, Grant Allen, Gsellfels and Murray.

May we be permitted a word of counsel to the returning traveller who has not restricted his movements by taking the usual circular ticket. If he voyage by the little steamer that plies between the Riva degli Schiavoni and Fusina (whence a steam tram will carry him to the S. Sofia station at Padua, near the Arena Chapel), he will pass along the old route from the mainland, and enjoy a last and certainly a fond and lingering view of the wonderful city as the boat slowly steams away from Venice through the canals of the Zattere and of Fusina. The train to Padua passes along the road that follows the course of the Canale di Brenta, affording glimpses of many an old patrician palace in picturesque decay. He will touch at Oriago where Jacopo del Cassero, who entreated Dante's prayers in the ante-Purgatorio, was overtaken and murdered by the assassins of the tyrant Azzo VIII. of Este, and saw among the reeds and the mire¹ "a pool growing on the ground from his veins."

At Rovato he will be amply repaid by turning aside from the main line to Milan, and following the slower but infinitely more beautiful route to the St Gothard line by way of Bergamo, Lecco, Menaggio, Porlezza and Lugano. Bergamo is one of the most perfectly preserved hill cities of Italy: a city of much interest to the student of Venetian history and of Italian art, containing, as it does, the fine renaissance Colleoni Chapel, with the tombs of the great Venetian Condottiero and of his young daughter Medea, the latter a beautiful and pathetic monument by the Lombard artist Giov. Ant. Amadeo. In the lower town is the important collection of paintings left by the famous art critic Morelli to his native city. A morning, too, may well be spent in an excursion to Colleoni's old chateau at Malpaga, whose walls in the courtyard and the interior bear the remains of frescoes, mostly by Romanino, illustrating the festivities which celebrated the visit of the King of Denmark to Malpaga. They are rich in historical interest, spirited, and by no means ill-preserved. The grand old mansion is now a farmhouse, and barn-door fowls roost in halls once filled with the pomp and circumstance that attended mighty princes and warriors. The chateau is reached by taking the steam tram to Carvernago on the Soncino line that starts from the E. side of the main Bergamo Station. A walk of a mile from Carvernago through a fruitful country will bring the visitor to Malpaga.

¹ "Delle mie vene farsi in terra lago." Purgatorio, Canto v., 64-86.

Preface

In order not to burden our pages with many notes we have limited references to such passages as seemed specially to call for them, exigencies of space having straitened a wide subject within close bounds. If, however, the perusal of this slight and imperfect sketch may lead intending travellers to turn to richer springs¹ our pleasant labours will be amply rewarded. It is with travel as with other modes of observation. The eye will see what the mind takes with it, for as the Spanish proverb quoted by Dr Johnson runs: "He who would bring home the wealth of the Indies must carry the wealth of the Indies with him."

¹ An exhaustive bibliography will be found in "The Cambridge Modern History," Vol. I.

Preface

A pleasant duty is that of expressing our gratitude for personal help and counsel, to, among others, Mr Horatio F. Brown, Signor Cantalamessa, the courteous Director of the Accademia, Mr Bolton King, Signor Alfredo Melani, Mr R. Phené Spiers, and Mr E. Pears.

NOTE.—In preparing Venice and its Story for publication in the Medieval Town Series opportunity has been taken of revising and supplementing the book, more especially in Part II., with the view of increasing its practical utility to travellers in the city.

CONTENTS

PART I.—THE STORY

CHAPTER I

	PAGE
The Foundation at Rialto	I

CHAPTER II

St Mark the Patron of Venice—The Brides of St Mark—Conquest of Dalmatia—Limitation of the Doge's Power	21
---	----

CHAPTER III

Expansion in the East—Reconciliation of Pope Alexander III. and the Emperor Barbarossa—The Wedding of the Adriatic	43
---	----

CHAPTER IV

Enrico Dandolo and the Capture of Constantinople	67
---	----

CHAPTER V

Peace and War—The Holy Inquisition—Conflict with the Genoese—Loss of Constantinople	86
--	----

CHAPTER VI

The Duel with Genoa—The Closing of the Great Council	101
---	-----

Contents

CHAPTER VII

	PAGE
The Oligarchy—Commercial Supremacy—The Bajamonte Conspiracy—The Council of the Ten—The Prisons	125

CHAPTER VIII

Conquests on the Mainland—Execution of Marin Faliero—The Fall of Genoa	141
---	-----

CHAPTER IX

Aggression on the Mainland—Arrest and Execution of Carmagnola—The Two Foscari	162
--	-----

CHAPTER X

The Turkish Terror—Acquisition of Cyprus— Discovery of the Cape Route to India— The French Invasions—The League of Cambrai—Decline of Venice	182
---	-----

CHAPTER XI

Loss of Cyprus—Lepanto—Paolo Sarpi— Attack on the Ten—Loss of Crete— Temporary Reconquest of the Morea— Decadence—The End	206
--	-----

CHAPTER XII

The Fine Arts at Venice

Masons—Mosaicists—Painters—Glass-workers —Printers	226
---	-----

Contents

PART II.—THE CITY

SECTION I

	PAGE
Arrival—The Piazza	272

SECTION II

The Basilica of St Mark	279
--	-----

SECTION III

The Ducal Palace—The Royal Palace	313
--	-----

SECTION IV

The Accademia	327
--------------------------------	-----

SECTION V

The Grand Canal and S. Giorgio Maggiore	352
--	-----

SECTION VI

S. Zulian—S. Maria Formosa—S. Zanipolo (SS. Giovanni e Paolo)—The Colleoni Statue—The Scuola di S. Marco—S. Maria dei Miracoli	365
---	-----

SECTION VII

The Frari—The Scuola and Church of S. Rocco	374
--	-----

SECTION VIII

S. Zaccaria—S. Giorgio degli Schiavoni—S. Francesco della Vigna	382
--	-----

Contents

SECTION IX

	PAGE
The Riva degli Schiavoni—S. Maria della Pietà—Petrarch's House—S. Giovanni in Bragora—S. Martino—The Arsenal—The Public Gardens—S. Pietro in Castello	386

SECTION X

S. Salvatore—Corte del Milione—S. Giovanni Grisostomo	390
--	-----

SECTION XI

S. Moisè—S. Stefano—Site of the Aldine Press—Il Bovolo—S. Vitale—S. Vio—The Salute—The Seminario	394
---	-----

SECTION XII

SS. Apostoli—Palazzo Falier—I Gesuiti—I Crociferi—S. Caterina—S. Maria dell'Orto—S. Marziale—Palazzo Giovanelli	400
--	-----

SECTION XIII

The Rialto—S. Giacomo di Rialto—S. Giovanni Elemosinario—S. Cassiano—S. Maria Mater Domini—Museo Civico—S. Giacomo dall'Orto	405
---	-----

SECTION XIV

S. Sebastiano—S. Maria del Carmine—S. Pantaleone—The Cobbler's Guildhall—S. Polo	412
---	-----

xiv

Contents

SECTION XV

	PAGE
Giudecca—The Redentore—The Zattere—The Gesuati—Lo Spirito Santo—S. Trovaso .	418

SECTION XVI

Palazzo Labia—S. Giobbe—The Gbetti—Gli Scalzi	421
--	-----

SECTION XVII

Titian's House—S. Michele in Isola—Murano .	423
--	-----

SECTION XVIII

Torcello—S. Francesco del Deserto—Burano .	428
---	-----

SECTION XIX

S. Nicolo del Lido	431
-------------------------------------	-----

SECTION XX

Chioggia	433
---------------------------	-----

APPENDIX

List of Doges	435
--------------------------------	-----

GENERAL INDEX	437
--------------------------------	------------

ILLUSTRATIONS

- v S. Zaccaria—Madonna Enthroned and Four Saints, by Giovanni Bellini (Photogravure) Frontispiece

	PAGE
Headpiece to Part I. Chapter I.	1
On the Lagoons	3
Ponte S. Giustina	5
S. Fosca and the Duomo, Torcello	7
(a) Early Ducal Cap from an old Mosaic in St Mark ; (b) Ducal Cap of Doge Moro, 1462-1471, from the Portrait in S. Giobbe	10
Cloisters of S. Gregorio	16
Fishing Boats	19
Cloister of S. Francesco della Vigna	23
S. Pietro in Castello, from S. Elena	28
Vine Pergola on the Giudecca	36
The Squero, S. Trovaso	49
S. Marco and the Doge's Palace, with the Loggetta in the Foreground	58
Columns of SS. Mark and Theodore	63
S. Marco—Interior, with Pulpit	70
S. Marco—Façade and Campanile	103
Doge's Palace—The Judgment of Solomon Corner	111
Remains of Marco Polo's House	119
Doge's Palace—Sala del Maggior Consiglio	123
Detail: Palazzo Zichy-Esterhazy	124

Illustrations

	PAGE
Ponte di Paglia and New Prison	135
The Palazzi Giustiniani and Foscari	151
Cloister of S. Gregorio	171
Statue of Bartolomeo Colleoni	175
Bust of Francesco Foscari	180
Palazzo Dario	193
The Piazzetta	275
S. Marco—Main Portal	281
S. Marco—Detail of Archivolt	283
S. Marco—Detail of Main Door	284
Byzantine Relief—North Side, S. Marco	287
Byzantine Relief from South Side, S. Marco	288
Capitals, Atrium, S. Marco	289
S. Giorgio Maggiore	301
Doge's Palace—The Cortile	321
Grand Canal, with the Riva del Carbon and Rialto Bridge	351
Ca' d' Oro	357
Palazzo Vendramin	360
Traghetto and Campo S. Samuele	363
Statue of Bartolomeo Colleoni	372
Headpiece to Section IX.	386
Venice from the Public Gardens	387
Well-Head: Campo S. Giovanni Grisostomo	391
The Rialto Bridge	393
Palazzo Contarini, with Spiral Staircase and Byzantine Well-Head	397

Illustrations

	PAGE
S. Maria della Salute	399
Edict Stone, Rialto	405
Byzantine Crosses—Campo S. Maria Mater Domini	407
Doorway with Coloured Relief of SS. Mark and Anianus; Cobbler's Guild House, Campo S. Tomà	415
Fishing Boats on the Giudecca	419
Headpiece to Section XVII.	423
Murano	425

REPRODUCTIONS OF PICTURES

✓ Palazzo Layard—Portrait of Sultan Mahomet II., by Gentile Bellini facing page	246
✓ Madonna dell' Orto—The Baptist and Four Saints, by Cima	250
✓ S. Caterina—The Marriage of St Catherine, by Veronese	264
✓ S. Giorgio Maggiore—St George and the Dragon, by Carpaccio	364
✓ Palazzo Giovanelli—Gipsy and Soldier, by Giorgione	402
✓ S. Maria Mater Domini—S. Cristina, by Catena	408

MAPS

✓ Sketch Map of Italy and the Eastern Mediterranean	facing page I
✓ Map of Venice	434

SKETCH MAP OF ITALY & the EASTERN MEDITERRANEAN

The Story of Venice

PART I

CHAPTER I

The Foundation at Rialto

“ Venice seems a type
Of life—'twixt blue and blue extends a stripe,
As life, the somewhat, hangs 'twixt nought and nought.”
—Browning.

OF the original home of the earliest settlers in that province of North Italy known to the Latins as Venetia, little can be told with certainty. Historians and antiquarians are pleased to bring them, under the name of Heneti or Eneti, from Paphlagonia, and explain some characteristic traits they subsequently developed—the love of colour and of display, the softness of their dialect—by their eastern origin. They were an independent, thriving and organised community when the Roman Empire first accepted their aid in the fierce struggle against the invading Gauls, and so they continued to be until they were absorbed as a province of the Empire. The land they cultivated, "mervailous in corne, wine, oyle, and all manner of frutes," was one of the richest in Europe; its soil was formed by ages of alluvial deposit brought by the rapid streams that drain the southern slopes of the Alps.

Venice and its Story

The traveller who enters Italy by any of the Alpine passes will not fail to note the contrast between the northern streams and the more torrential water-ways of the south, which, however, being soon checked by the deposit they bring, grow slack and fray out into many and varying channels, through which the waters find their way with small, at times almost imperceptible, flow into the sea. So lazily do the rivers discharge that the north-east shores of the Adriatic are formed of sandbanks, shoals and islets, which for nigh a hundred miles from Cavarzere to Grado constituted the dogado of Venice. The famous Venetian lagoon is confined to some thirty miles north of Chioggia, and is divided into the Laguna morta, where the tide is scarcely felt, and the Laguna viva, where the sea is studded with numerous islands and islets protected by the lidi, a long line of remarkable breakwaters formed by the prevailing set of the current to the west, with narrow openings or Porti through which the shallow tide ebbs and flows. This natural barrier has made the existence of Venice possible, for the islands on which the city is built afforded a refuge safe alike from attack by sea or land. The colonisation, development and defence of these lagoons and islands by settlers from the mainland make up the early history of Venice.

Some misapprehension exists as to the nature of these settlements. The picture of terror-stricken and

The Foundation at Rialto

ON THE LAGOONS

despoiled fugitives from the cities of Venetia escaping from hordes of pursuing Huns or Lombards to seek a refuge in the barren and uncertain soil of mud-banks and storm-swept islands is true in part only. In many cases the movement was a deliberately organised migration of urban communities, with their officers, their craftsmen, their tools, their sacred vessels, even the very stones of their churches, to towns and villages already known to them. Among the settlers were men of all classes—patrician and plebeian, rich and poor. “But they would receive no man of servile condition, or a murderer, or of wicked life.”

Some islands were already inhabited by a hardy race of pilots and fishermen: others by prosperous Roman patricians, with their villas, farms, gardens and orchards. Grado was a busy commercial settlement with rich vineyards and meadows, and joined to the mainland by a causeway that led to Aquileia. Heraclea was rather a mainland than a lagoon city; Torcello is said to have been a fashionable Roman watering-place, and Roman remains have been found at S. Giorgio Maggiore. Much of the ground was covered with pine forests, the haunts of game and other wild creatures. For a long time the islands were not regarded by the settlers as abiding places. Again and again many of them returned to their old homes on the mainland when the invaders' force was spent, and it was only in 568 that the Lombards, more cruel, or perhaps more systematic in their oppression than Marcoman or Hun, finally determined the Venetians to make the lagoons their permanent home.

Venice and its Story

Who of us northmen that has reached the descending slope of an Alpine pass, it may be through mist and sleet and snow, to gaze upon the rich and luscious plains of Lombardy or Venetia smiling with vine and fruit and corn; who that has felt the warm breath of sun-steeped Italy caressing his face as he emerges from northern gloom, but will feel that twinge of envy akin to covetousness, which in strong and masterful races quickly develops into lust of conquest?

In the fifth century of our era the Roman Empire decaying, like most giants, at the extremities, lay defenceless before the inroads of those forceful, elemental peoples who from north and east swept down the passes to ravage the garden of Italy and to enslave her inhabitants. In 452 Venetia became the prey of God's scourge—Attila. Aquileia, now a poor village just within the Austrian frontier, but then a Roman city of the first rank, was plundered. Altinum, a city famous for its strength and wealth, resisted for a time but soon its inhabitants and those of Padua, Asolo, Belluno and other mainland cities forsook their homes and migrated to the lagoons.

The earliest settlements were twelve: Grado, Bibbione, Caorle, Jesolo (Cavallino), Eraclea, Torcello, Burano, Rivoalto (Rialto), Malamocco, Poveglia, Cluges Minor (actual site unknown, but not Sotto Marina, as sometimes stated), Cluges Major (Chioggia). Of these, Grado was occupied by the Aquileians; Rivoalto and Malamocco by the Paduans; Eraclea by the Bellonese; Torcello and Burano by the Altinese. To the pious imagination of chroniclers these migrations were not without divine admonition.

The Foundation at Rialto

In 568 the terrible Lombards were threatening Altinum, whose inhabitants entreated the help of heaven with tears and prayers and fastings; and, lo! they saw the doves and many other birds bearing their young in their beaks flying from their nests in the walls of the city. This was interpreted as a sign from God that they too were to expatriate themselves and seek safety in flight. They divided into three bodies, one of which turned to Istria, another to Ravenna: the third remained behind, uncertain whither to direct their steps. Three days they fasted, and at length a voice was heard saying: "Salite

PONTE S. GIUSTINA

Venice and its Story

subiit ad astra et ascendit in altum et respexit in altum et ait: "Ascendite ad astra et respicite in altum." (Ascend the tower and look at the stars.) Their good Bishop Paul climbed the tower, and to his gaze the very stars of the firmament seemed to set themselves in a constellation that figured forth the fateful group of islands in the lagoon before him. His flock, following this warning from heaven, went forth, headed by their bishop and clergy bearing the sacred vessels and relics, and passed to an island high and fertile, which they called Torcello, from one of the twelve towers of their old city. The very hierarchy of heaven, from Our Lord and His Blessed Mother to St Peter and the Baptist, even to Giustina, the martyred little maid of Padua, appeared to Mauro, the priest, in a vision, as he paced the sea shore, and in sweet voices bade him build here a church and there a church in their honour. The immigrants therefore had come to make the lagoons their permanent home, and a new city was organised. In process of time churches were built; trade guilds were formed; painters and mosaicists enriched the buildings. The marble seat on the grass-grown piazza of Torcello, to this day called Attila's chair, was probably the official seat of the tribune when he administered justice to the people.

It will be seen that no definite date can be assigned to the foundation of Venice, though Sanudo is very sure it was in "the year ccccxxi., on the xxv. of March, which was a Friday, that day on which our father Adam was created, when about the hour of nones the first stone of St Giacomo di Rivoalto was laid by the Paduans." The great diarist gives a charming picture of the earliest Venetians trading in fish and salt with their little barks to the neighbouring shores: "They were a lowly people, who esteemed mercy and innocency, and, above all, religion rather than riches. They affected not to clothe them with ornaments, nor

S. FOSCA AND THE DUOMO, TORCELLO

Venice and its Story

to seek honours, but when need was they answered to the call."

There is little doubt that originally the settlers were subject to the Consuls at Padua, but in 466 they were strong enough to meet at Grado and to elect their own tribunes, one for each of the twelve communities. A passage in a famous letter of Cassiodorus to these Tribuni Maritimi in 523 affords the first glimpse in history of the lagoon folk. The secretary of Theodoric the Great writes urging them not to fail to transport the tribute of oil, honey and wine from Istria to Ravenna, and expatiates on their great security and the wonderful habitations that he has seen, like sea-birds' nests, half on land, half on sea, or like the cyclades spread over the broad bosom of the waters. Their land is made not by nature but by man, for the soil is strengthened by flexible withy bands, and they oppose frail dykes to the waves of the sea. Their boats are tied to posts before their doors like horses are on the mainland. Rich and poor live in equality; they flee from the vice of envy, to which the whole world is enslaved. Instead of plough and scythe they handle cylinders, and in their salt produce a merchandise more desired than gold, so that all the fruits of the earth are at their command.

About 530, when Narses the Eunuch began the great campaign which wrested the Italian dominions of the Emperors from the Goths, the Venetians gave him effective aid by transporting an army of Lombard mercenaries from Aquileia to Ravenna. As a reward Narses¹ sent some Byzantine masters, who from the spoils of the enemy built the Church of St Theodore at Rivoalto on a plot of ground known as the Broglio or garden where now stands the Basilica of St Mark. Scarcely, however, were the Goths defeated, when in 568 Alboin and his Lombards menaced the land. Longinus, who succeeded Narses in the exarchate of Ravenna, came to Venice and asked her aid as subject to the Emperor. He was given an honourable and festive welcome, but the Venetians had bought their freedom at a great price and stoutly refused to admit his claim. They declared that the second Venice which they had made in the waters was a mighty habitation and their very own by right of creation; that they feared no power of Prince or Emperor, for he could not reach them. They, however, furnished a ship and sent an embassy with Longinus to Constantinople, and in return for valuable trading rights, agreed to acknowledge the suzerainty of the Emperor if no formal oath were exacted. In 584 the lagoon folk had so expanded that an additional magistrate was chosen for each community. Of these Tribuni majores was formed a federal council, the original tribunes now serving as heads of local administrations.

¹ So the chroniclers; but Roberto Galli, in a learned and ingenious treatise published in the Atti dell' Istituto Veneto, claims to have demonstrated that the churches of St Theodore and of S. Geminiano were founded in the ninth century by a patrician of Heraclea named Narses.

The Foundation at Rialto

The golden age so lovingly dwelt upon by the early chroniclers was of short duration. Already, before the institution of the new magistrates, family and local feuds, the ambition of the tribunes and jealousy of the people, led to bloody affrays in the Pinete (pine forests) with which the lidi were clothed. Anarchy threatened the state; bands of Lombards under the Duke of Friuli plundered the churches of Heraclea and Grado. The crisis was met by the public spirit and wisdom of the Church, and a general meeting (Arengo) was called by the Patriarch of Grado at Heraclea. Two vital problems came to the front—the organisation of self-defence and the maintenance of public order. The whole Assembly having invoked the name of Christ, the great churchman stood forth, and after reviewing the political situation, proposed that all the tribunes should be relegated to purely local offices, and a Capo or chief elected for life. His new polity was approved and in 697 Pauluccio Anafesto was chosen first Doge

Venice and its Story

a. EARLY DUCAL CAP FROM AN OLD MOSAIC IN ST MARK
b. DUCAL CAP OF DOGE MORO, 1462-1471, FROM THE PORTRAIT IN S. GIOBBE

and invested with sovereign powers. Thus was constituted the Dogeship of Venice which, save for a short interruption of six years, endured for eleven centuries. The Doge could nominate, degrade or dismiss all public officers, convoke or dissolve the Arengo and the synod; the appointment of Patriarchs and Bishops was subject to his veto; the military authority, entrusted to a Master of the soldiers, was subordinate to him; foreign affairs were in his hands, though the approval of the people was required to declare war or conclude peace; he could impose taxes; and his feudal dues and rights of corvée were extensive. His state was regal. When he went abroad, girt with a sword and surrounded by his guards, a state umbrella was held over him, lighted tapers were borne by his side, trumpets blared and banners waved. He sat enthroned in an ivory chair, holding a sceptre, and arrayed in a silk mantle with a fringe of gold fastened by a gold clasp over a tightly fitting tunic trimmed with ermine; he wore red hose and a high biretta richly jewelled, which was subsequently shortened by constricting the middle so as to form two lobes, one of which soon disappeared, and the familiar horned cap of the later Doges was evolved. A close cap of fine linen was worn beneath, so that when the biretta was raised his head should be covered as a mark of dignity. The Doge was no fainéant. He rose before the dawn, and having heard mass went forth to judge the people and transact the business of the day. On solemn occasions he gave his benediction, and the blessing of God was invoked upon him in the litany. The election, more or less democratic until the abolition of the Arengo in 1423, was made by the whole people, who were summoned from Grado to Cavarzere. Their chosen one was acclaimed and carried shoulder high to the church, which he entered barefoot, and there swore to govern according to the laws and to work for the good of the people. The result of the election was communicated to the Pope and the Emperor; to the latter usually by the Doge's son in person.

The Foundation at Rialto

Anafesto had a difficult task. The young state lay between two mighty powers: Lombards or Franks and Pope in the west, the Byzantine Emperor in the east. Only by vigilance and prudence could she escape subjection. And these rival interests were active within her borders — aristocratic Heraclea leaning towards the Eastern Empire; democratic Malamocco and Jesolo towards the Western kingdoms and the Pope. One of the first acts of the new

Venice and its Story

Doge, after securing internal peace, was to conclude a treaty with Luitprand, King of the Lombards, by which the boundaries of the Republic were defined, and in return for an annual payment, valuable rights of wood-cutting, horse-breeding and trading were conceded. But political jealousy dies hard; two powerful families revolted in 717, and the Doge perished in a civil broil in the Pineta of Jesolo.

During the reign of the third Doge, Orso of Heraclea, the Venetians were called to meet a new danger. The rise of the Iconoclasts in the early eighth century, and the zeal of their protagonist, the Emperor Leo III., had set east and west aflame. Leo's attempt to enforce the decree against the use of images in the western Church was met by an invitation to the Lombards from the Pope to attack the seat of the eastern power in Italy. War was the very breath of their nostrils, and they were not slow to respond. Ravenna was besieged and captured and the Pentapolis occupied;¹ the Exarch Paul fled to the lagoons and appealed to Orso for help. The fugitive enlarged on the danger to Venice of the advancing Lombards, now at their very door, and the Doge agreed to furnish a fleet. By successful strategy Ravenna was surprised and recaptured; the Exarchate was restored; and the gratified Emperor rewarded the Venetians by conferring the title of Hypatos (knight) on their Doge, who adopted it as a family name.

This imperial policy was, however, bitterly resented by the popular party. A civil war ensued which lasted two years, and ended in the defeat of the Heracleans, the murder of the Doge, and the banishment of his son. Another experiment in statecraft was now made. The Dogeship was abolished, and the Master of the soldiers appointed head of the State for a term of one year. This new departure proved disastrous, and after six years of civil discord, the last of the Masters, a Heracleian, was captured and blinded by the opposite party. An Arengo was called, this time at Malamocco, and a compromise effected. Deodato, son of Orso, a Heracleian, was made Doge at Malamocco, whither the capital was now transferred. But Heraclea and Jesolo were rivals, fierce as ever, for the ducal chair; and the internecine strife continued with its savage incidents: assassination, blinding,¹ or banishment was the price of defeat. At length, by the election of Maurizio Galbaio in 764, "noble by race, nobler in deeds," the distracted state was ruled with wisdom and firmness, and faction for a time was silenced.

¹ Rimini, Pesaro, Fano, Sinigaglia and Ancona.

The Foundation at Rialto

The epoch-making victory of Charles Martel over the Arabs at Tours had drawn the eyes of all men to France, and to a mighty race of princes destined to change the face of Europe. The restless Lombards in 752 had reoccupied Ravenna and the Pentapolis, and the Pope turned to the new Carlovingian dynasty for help against them. Pepin the Short answered to the call, wrested the cities from their hands, and gave them to the Pope, who thus became a temporal sovereign. Twenty years later the papacy was again constrained to summon help. Charlemagne, Pepin's son, crossed the Alps by the Great St Bernard pass, fell like a thunderbolt of war on the Lombards, and in 774 their dominion was finally crushed by the capture of Desiderio their King, and Pavia, their royal city. Romanin argues from the silence of the chroniclers that the Venetians took no active part in the siege of Pavia, but from an old inscription in Venetian, on a thin plate of hammered lead,¹ preserved in the British Museum, we learn that on the invitation of Charlemagne, the Venetians sent a fleet of twenty-four galleys, with four nobles who knew the art of war (saveva far la guara) up the Po to the siege, and had the honour of guarding the captive King. Venice had indeed watched every phase of the struggle, seizing, as was her wont, any opportunity that offered for extending the trading privileges so vital to her existence. By secret information to the Church from her merchants at Constantinople, she had nipped a plot to recover the Exarchate, now for ever lost to the Greek Emperors. But in 781 Pepin, second son of Charlemagne, had been crowned King of Italy by the Pope; the power of the Franks was growing apace, and their alliance with a territorial Pope alarmed the Heracleian party, who believed the wiser policy were to form an alliance with the weaker Empire far in the east against the Franks.

¹ A method of disposing of a political enemy, so common in Italy, in the middle ages, that it was expressed by a word abbasinare, from the basino or red hot basin of brass fixed before the eyes of the victim.

Venice and its Story

In 778 Doge Maurizio Galbaio was permitted, on the plea of infirmity, to associate his son Giovanni with him, and on the death of Maurizio, Giovanni stepped into his father's office, thus effecting a subtle change in the nature of the Dogeship, by no means pleasing to the democratic party. The Franks were not long in making their power felt. Venetian merchants had acquired some territory near Ravenna, and many trading centres in the neighbouring cities. They were incorrigible slave traders, and Pope Zacharias, a generation before, had been moved to compassion on seeing in Rome groups of Christian slaves,¹ men and women, belonging to Venetian merchants, destined to be sold to the pagans in Africa. He paid their price and set them at liberty. Charlemagne having recently published an edict against the traffic in slaves, now called on Pope Hadrian to take action, and the Venetians were expelled from Ravenna and the Pentapolis.

¹ See "Archæologia," vol. xlv. p. 128. This curious inscription purports to have been interpreted in 1202 by Marin Dandolo, Procurator of St Mark, from the Latin of an old and decayed parchment written by Orso Hypato of Heraclea.

The Foundation at Rialto

In 797 the new see of Olivolo which had been created a few years before to meet the growing needs of the population, became vacant, and the new Doge preferred Christophorus Damianus, a young Greek, to the bishopric. The Patriarch of Grado, around whom the Frankish party centred, refused to consecrate one whom he regarded as a nominee of the Byzantine Emperor, and excommunicated Bishop and Doge. The Doge's answer was swift and terrible. He despatched his son Maurizio with a fleet to Grado; the city was attacked; the Patriarch captured, thrown from the tower of his palace, and dashed to pieces. To allay popular indignation, Fortunatus, a nephew of the murdered Patriarch, was appointed in his stead. The new prelate soon showed of what stuff he was made. With infinite resource and indomitable purpose he set himself to avenge the insult to the Church, and, but for the premature discovery of the plot, would have wrought the destruction of the Doge and his party. Fortunatus fled to the court of Charlemagne, who was now created Holy Roman Emperor, and harbouring no tender feelings towards the rebellious children of the lagoons. Obelerio, tribune of Mala-

¹ So late as 1428 a Russian female slave was sold by one friar to another for 52 sequins, with "right to dispose of her body and soul in perpetuity." The contract is quoted by Filiasi. In 1492 a Saracen slave, 15 years old, fetched 25 sequins.

CLOISTERS OF S. GREGORIO

The Foundation at Rialto

mocco, and the other heads of the conspiracy found safety at Treviso, whence they stirred their partizans to action with decisive effect. The Doge and his son were exiled to Mantua; Obelerio was proclaimed Doge in 804, and the triumph of the Frankish party was complete. The Heracleans, however, soon rallied: in their civil fury they fell upon Jesolo, and almost wiped it out. The Doge immediately led a punitive expedition to Heraclea, and wreaked a similar vengeance on that hot-bed of Byzantine faction. The situation was now felt to be unbearable. By general consent a meeting of the whole dogado was called, and it was decided that in order to make peace, the remaining populations of Heraclea and of Jesolo should be transported to Malamocco.

Fortunatus meanwhile was watching events at Istria. Under the sun of Charlemagne's favours he had waxed rich and powerful; he possessed four ships, and traded under royal patronage wherever the new western Emperor's power reached. By skilful diplomacy he effected his recall to Grado, and placed a Frankish partizan in the see of Olivolo. But the Heracleans had lost their home, not their ideals and policy; they appealed to the Byzantine Emperor, a Greek fleet sailed up the Adriatic, and Fortunatus once again was a fugitive. The Doge and his party protested a loyalty to their suzerain, which in 809 was translated into acts by the despatch of a fleet to aid him to recover the exarchate for the Greeks. It was unsuccessful, but none the less irritating to the Pope and Emperor, who now determined to subdue the Venetians and incorporate them into the Holy Roman Empire of the West. The immediate cause of the rupture is not known, but when the princes of the earth are bent on war a pretext is seldom hard to find. A great empire, aiming at universal dominion, is ill at ease with a sturdy freedom-loving state on its borders, and the far-reaching arm of the invincible Carolingians was stretched forth to grasp, as they thought, an easy prey.

Venice and its Story

In the stress of a common danger, faction was silenced. Obelerio and his brother Beato, whom he had associated with him a year after he was proclaimed Doge, advised that the Venetians should agree with their adversary before it was too late, but a wave of popular indignation swept them from power, and Angelo Participazio, a Heracleian by birth, and one of the tribunes of Rivoalto, was made head of a provisional government of national defence. The churches were filled with earnest, determined men, entreating with fasting and prayer the divine aid in their hour of need; a call was made on every citizen at home and abroad to hasten to the defence of the fatherland; provisions were accumulated, ships built, fortifications raised, channels blocked by chains and sunken hulks, guide posts drawn.

Meanwhile, King Pepin had summoned his allies, and a fleet sailed up to the lagoons. On the mainland the advance of the Frankish armies was irresistible; north and south they closed in on the Venetians: Grado soon fell; Brondolo, the Chioggie, and other cities were captured; fire and sword wasted their settlements. The porti of Brondolo, Chioggia, and Pelestrina were forced; Malamocco¹ the capital threatened. At this crisis the momentous decision was taken to abandon Malamocco and concentrate at Rivoalto, a compact group of islands between the mainland and the lidi.

¹ The original Malamocco, destroyed by flood in the twelfth century, was a fortified place girt with walls and towers, whose precise locality is not now known. It was situated on the open Adriatic, not far from the present Malamocco. Filiasi, writing about 1800, says the ruins used to be seen at low tide about a good stone's throw from the lido.

The Foundation at Rialto

On the lido of Pelestrina, south of S. Pietro in Volta, where the steamer to Chioggia now calls, is the little fishing village of Porto Secco. Here in olden times was a porto called Albiola. North of this passage stood the city of Albiola on the lido which stretched towards Malamocco. South began the lido of Pelestrina. Here it was that, according to tradition, a stand was made. The Frankish host of horse and foot gathered on the lido of Albiola, waiting for their fleet to force the porto, which was deep enough to allow of the passage of the transports. Opposite, on the lido of Pelestrina, stood the Venetians near their boats, which were armoured with ramparts of sails, cordages, and masts, behind which their archers did much execution. For nigh six months the desperate fight was waged. "Ye are my subjects," cried Pepin, "since from my lands ye come." The Venetians answered, "We will be subject to the Emperor¹ of the Romans, not to thee."

FISHING BOATS

Venice and its Story

Malamocco was at length captured, but was found to be deserted. Rough rafts and pontoons were constructed to thread the maze of shallow channels that led to Rivoalto, but the light, waspish boats of the Venetians drove them on to the shoals by the canal Orfano, where they were caught front and rear, and those who escaped suffocation in the water and the mud were quickly cut down by their enemies. The summer heats came; the arrows of the sun, more deadly than Venetian arms, wrought havoc among the Franks, whose forces wasted away, and the Carolingians were baffled. A Greek fleet threatening his rear, forced Pepin to come to terms; he promised to withdraw, to restore the captured territory, and to reaffirm all the ancient trading rights and privileges in his dominions in return for an annual payment. The Venetians emerged from the struggle a victorious and a united people centred at Rialto, and the State of Venice was now firmly rooted in the lagoons.

¹ The Greek Emperor at Constantinople.

CHAPTER II

St Mark the Patron of Venice—The Brides of St Mark—Conquest of Dalmatia — Limitation of the Doge's Power

“ But I must tellen verilie
Of St Marke's . . .
. . . holy shrine
Exalt amid the tapers' shine
At Venice.”

—Keats.

AN immediate outburst of creative energy was the result of the victory: Angelo Participazio was chosen Doge and set himself to enlarge, fortify and embellish Rialto. The ravaged settlements of the Chioggie, Brondolo, Pelestrina and Albiola were rebuilt; a new Heraclea, called Città nuova, rose on the ruins of the old capital; dykes were raised, rivers diverted and canals bridged. A ducal palace was erected near the Church of St Theodore, and a church to S. Pietro at Olivolo; the Chapel and Convent of S. Zaccaria were founded and endowed by the Doge to contain the body of S. Zaccaria, father of the Baptist, and other relics given to the Venetians by Leo the Eastern Emperor.

There was an old tradition among the early settlers at Rialto that St Mark on his way from Alexandria to preach the Faith in Aquileia was caught in a violent storm and driven to land on one of the Rialtine islands where now stands the Church of S. Francesco della Vigna. As he stepped forth from his bark an angel saluted him saying : "Pace a te Marco Evangelista mio" (Peace to thee Mark my Evangelist), and announced that one day his body should find a resting-place and veneration at Rialto. Traditions, like prophecies, have a way of bringing their own fulfilment, and in the brief reign of Angelo's son Giustiniani (827-829) some Venetians trading with the infidels in defiance of imperial prohibition succeeded in stealing the Evangelist's body and carrying it to Venice. The story of "how the precious body of Monsignor S. Marco came to Venice" is thus told by Da Canale. "Now at this time there was a ship of the Venetians at Alexandria on which were three valiant men, the one called Messer Rustico of Torcello, the other Messer Buono of Malamocco, the third Messer Stauracio; which three valiant men had great hope and devotion to bring the body of S. Marco to Venice, and they so got round (s'en alerent tant autour) the guardian of the body that having won his friendship they said to him : Messer, if thou wilt come with us to Venice and bear away the body of Monsignor S. Marco thou shalt become a rich man. And when he, who was called Theodore, heard this he answered : Sirs, hold your peace, say not so, that may not be in any wise, for the pagans hold it more precious than aught else in the world, and if they espied us would surely cut off our heads. Then said they, wait until the blessed Evangelist command thee. And it came to pass that there entered into the heart of this worthy guardian a desire to bear away the body, and he returned to them saying : Sirs, how can we take away Monsignor S. Marco without the knowledge of any man? And one answered : Right wisely will we do it. And they went hastily by night to the sepulchre where the body lay and put it in a basket and covered it with cabbages and swine's flesh, and they took

Venice and its Story

CLOISTER OF S. FRANCESCO DELLA VIGNA

Venice and its Story

another body, laid it in the tomb in the very same cloth from which the body of Monsignor S. Marco had been taken and sealed the tomb as it was before. And the valiant men bore the body to the ship in that same basket as I have told of, and for dread of the pagans slung it to a mast of their ship. What shall I tell you? At that very moment when they opened the tomb, so sweet and so great an odour spread through the midst of the city that all the spiceries in Alexandria could not have caused the like. Wherefore the pagans said: "Mark is stirring, for they were wont to smell such fragrance every year. Nevertheless there were of them who misdoubted and went to the tomb and opened it and, seeing the body I have told of in St Mark's shroud, were satisfied. And some there were who came to the ship and searched it about, but when they saw the swine's flesh by the mast did straightway flee from the ship crying Kanzir! Kanzir! which is to say, Pork! Pork! Now the wind was fair and strong, and they set sail for Venice and on the third day came by Romania (Greece). And a mighty wind arose by night when the mariners were sleeping, and the ship was driving on to the rocks; but the precious Evangelist awakened the master mariner and said to him: Look that thou set down the sails, for we are making for the land; and the master awakened the shipmen and they struck the sails. And if anyone will know the truth let him come to Venice and see the fair Church of Monsignor S. Marco, and look in front of this fair church, for there is inscribed all this story even as I have related it, and likewise he will gain the great pardon of vii. years which Monsignor the Apostle (the Pope) granted to all who should go to that fair church."

The Doge, uttering the very words of the angelic salutation, and the clergy welcomed the body with great ceremony: the traders were forgiven their unlawful voyage, and St Mark became the patron of the Republic instead of St Theodore. A chapel was begun on land acquired from the nuns of S. Zaccaria in the Broglio, which was still a grass-grown field planted with trees bounded by the Canal Battario, that flowed across what is now the Piazza of St Mark. In the next reign the body, which had been temporarily placed in the ducal palace, was solemnly transferred to its shrine in the new chapel of St Mark and Stauracio appointed Primicerio or President of the Chapter.

St Mark the Patron of Venice

In 829 Giovanni Participazio, the third of the dynasty, began his uneasy tenure of eight years. Obelerio plotted to regain his lost power in Venice, but was foiled and executed, and his head exposed on a stake. A more successful rival was the Tribune Caroso, who worked on popular suspicion of the hereditary tendencies in the reigning family, and drove Giovanni to exile in France. Caroso's tyranny, however, was a bad exchange for the milder rule of the exiled Doge; the usurper was overthrown and blinded, and Giovanni recalled. But the same jealousy on the part of the people which made Caroso's coup d'état possible again manifested itself. The Doge was seized as he was returning on St Peter's Day from the church at Olivolo; his hair and beard were shaven, and he was forced to retire into a monastery at Grado.

Pietro Tradonico, the chosen of the democracy in 836, was much occupied with the pirates who, from their rocky fastnesses in the creeks and bays of the Dalmatian coast, swooped down on the rich Venetian argosies as they sailed the Adriatic. By a first expedition he reduced their chiefs for a while to submission; a second was less happy in its results. The tide of Saracen invasion was met at Caorle and rolled back, and two great ships of war were constructed to guard the porti. Amid the stress of war the arts of diplomacy were not neglected. A treaty still exists, dated 840, between Lothair, "by Divine Providence Emperor Augustus and the most glorious Duke of the Venetians," for a period of five years: their relations in peace and war are defined; mutual restitution of runaway slaves is promised; traffic in the subjects of the contracting powers prohibited; and the inviolability of ambassadors and of correspondence assured. Pietro had the honour of welcoming the first royal tourists to Venice (855) in the person of King Louis II. of Italy and his consort, who spent three days in the wondrous city. The defeated Participazi were, however, biding their time. In 864 the People's Doge was assassinated when leaving the Church of S. Zaccaria after Vespers and his body lay on the ground until nightfall, when the pious nuns gave it sepulture in the atrium of their church.

Venice and its Story

The chroniclers record the great wisdom and piety of Orso Participazio, who succeeded the murdered Doge. He cleared the seas of pirates, and sought, by calling a synod of clergy and laity, to purge Venice from the iniquitous traffic in slaves, which continued to stain her commerce. Rialto was made healthier by drainage and building; Dorsodura peopled. The growth of the arts of peace may be measured by the fact that the Venetians were able at this time to make a present of twelve bells to the Greek Emperor. Orso died full of years and honours in 881, and was buried in S. Zaccaria. During the short reign of his son Giovanni a descent was made on Comacchio, a city on the mainland north of Ravenna, whose growing power and commerce roused the jealousy of Venice. The Venetians had long memories, and the help given to Pepin was now avenged by the devastation of the city and the country even up to the walls of Ravenna. In 887 Pietro Candiano, a devout Christian, and a wise and brave prince, was elected, and after a reign of five months met a soldier's death fighting against the pirates.

St Mark the Patron of Venice

Pietro Tribuno, who succeeded him, was called upon to face a new danger. In the spring of 900 the Hungarians came down the usual track of the barbarian invaders by the Friulian passes—"that most baneful gate left open by nature for the chastisement of the sins of Italy"—and ravaged the land. They were held too cheaply by Berengarius, King of Italy, and, flushed with victory, spread terror even to the lagoons. The preparations made to resist Pepin were renewed. Rialto was fortified and a strong castle built on the island of Olivolo, which is called Castello to this day. By the way of the Franks the terrible barbarians overran the outer cities of the dogado, and made for the Porto of Albiola: the Venetian fleet met them, happy omen, at the very spot where Pepin's might was crushed. A fierce fight ensued, and the battle was again to the islanders. The Hungarians were scattered, and fled, never to return; Pietro was hailed by Berengarius preserver of the public liberty, and was honoured by the Eastern Emperor. Two years later the foundations of the old Campanile, or watch tower, were laid in a spot where a great elder tree had flourished. At the death of the Doge in 912 the Participazi returned to power.

Orso Participazio II. (912) was a saintly and righteous prince who retired to a monastery after a peaceful reign of twenty years, during which the Venetians obtained from the Emperor Rudolph a confirmation of the right to coin their own money. How great was the expansion of their trade is illustrated in the reign of the next Doge, Pietro Candiano II. (932), who, by the simple expedient of a commercial boycott, brought the arbitrary feudal lord of Istria to his knees. In 942, after a short and uneventful term of power by the rival dynasty, Candiano's son Pietro became Doge.

Venice and its Story

A romantic incident in the ever-recurring battles with the Narentine (Slav) pirates, and first described in a Latin poem by Pace da Friuli about 1300, may be referred to this reign. On the feast of the translation of St Mark it was the custom for the marriageable damsels of Venice to repair to S. Pietro in Castello, bearing their dowries with them in caskets, to be formally betrothed to their lovers and receive the benediction of the Church. Informed of this anniversary, some pirates concealed themselves in the thick bush which then covered part of the island, forced their way into the church during the ceremony, seized brides and dowries, and regained their boats. The Doge, who was present, hastened from the church, and called the people to arms. Some vessels belonging to the Cabinet-makers' Guild, whose quarter was near the Church of S. Maria Formosa, were offered to the Doge, and the avengers set forth in pursuit. They came upon the pirates dividing their booty in a remote part of the lagoon of Caorle, afterwards called porto delle Donzelle, defeated them, and returned in triumph to Rialto with brides and dowries, the Cabinet-makers having greatly distinguished themselves.

S. PIETRO IN CASTELLO, FROM S. ELENA

The Brides of St Mark

To commemorate the rape and rescue of the brides of St Mark, the Doges were used on the day of the Purification to proceed in solemn state to the Church of S. Maria Formosa to render thanks to the Virgin. Twelve poor girls, the Marie, were dowered and took part in the procession, together with the chief guilds of Venice. Simple in its origin, the celebration became more and more sumptuous, till at length so great was the burden on the private resources of the families whose lot it was to provide for the Marie, that in 1271 the number was reduced to four. Later, a tax was imposed on every family to meet the cost of the eight days' fiesta. In 1379 the funds were swallowed up in the financial demands of the Genoese wars, and all that remained of the old magnificence was the annual visit of the Doge to the church, and the offering, made to him by the parish priest, of oranges, muscat wine, and gilded straw hats. The origin of the Doge's attendance at this church, and of the quaint offerings, is traced to a legend that the Cabinet-makers, in acknowledgment of their prowess, asked of the Doge the favour of an annual visit. To the Doge's objection, "But if it be too hot," they answered, "We will give you refreshment"; and to the further objection, "But if it rain," they answered, "We will furnish you with hats."

The custom lasted till the end of the Republic, and Da Canale gives a graphic description of the festival as it was celebrated in the thirteenth century. On the vigil of the feast of the Translation of St Mark, a company of noble youths came by water to the ducal palace and, having distributed banners to some children, formed in line two by two, accompanied by trumpeters

Venice and its Story

and players of cymbals, and by other youths bearing trays of silver loaded with sweets, silver vessels filled with wine, and cups of gold and silver. The clergy followed, arrayed in Calamanco cloth of gold, chanting a litany, and the whole procession went its way to S. Maria Formosa, where a number of dames and damsels were met, to whom wine and sweets were presented. On the last day of January the procession was renewed with greater splendour. Over five hundred banners were distributed, and more than a hundred lads bearing crosses of silver took part. Following the priests came a clerk, dressed as the Virgin, in Damascus cloth of gold, borne in a richly decorated chair on the shoulders of four men, gonfalons resplendent with gold waving around. The Doge, surrounded by the Venetian nobility, stood at a window of the ducal palace, while three of the clergy chanted the usual lauds of his greatness and power. The Doge then joined the procession, which wended its way to S. Maria Formosa. Here stood another clerk dressed as the angel Gabriel, who sang the "Hail Mary" as the figure of the Virgin appeared. The ceremony being ended, twelve great banquets were held, at each of which one of the Marie was present, clad in cloth of gold adorned with jewels and pearls innumerable, and wearing a crown of gold set with precious stones. On the day following, a gorgeous aquatic pageant, more than a mile and a half in length, with the Doge in his mastro nave, the clergy and the Marie made the tour of the Grand Canal, and "if you were there you could see the whole waters covered with boats filled with men and women, so that no one could count them, and a throng of dames and damsels at the windows and on the banks, apparelled so richly that none in Venice might surpass them." Regattas, balls, and music followed; the whole city gave itself up to joy and gladness.

The Brides of St Mark

Pietro Candiano's reign of seventeen years set in storm and calamity. His son, Pietro, whom according to old custom he had associated with him in the office, rebelled, and sought to drive his father from the throne. There was a sharp fight on the Piazza; the rebellion collapsed and the Venetian Absalom was only saved from death by the entreaties of his aged father; he was excluded from the succession and banished, but only to turn pirate and harry his countrymen. The scourge of the plague and sorrow for his son's impiety embittered the last days of the old Doge, and in 959 he died a broken-hearted man. But scarce was he laid to rest when a splendid fleet, gay with banners, bore a deputation of nobles and clergy to Ravenna to invite the proscribed pirate to become lord of Venice: the pressure of a powerful family and the fear of civil discord had led to the recall of the only prince who seemed strong enough to rule the troubled state. Pietro began by blinding and exiling the Bishop of Torcello, guilty of simony, and by calling a synod to deal again with the persistent abomination of the slave trade at Venice. There was no concealment. Slaves, chiefly young girls from twelve to sixteen years of age, bought in the ports of Russia and Circassia, were openly sold by auction at Venice and the deed of sale was drawn up by a notary. Doge, clergy and people met in St Mark's and the disgraceful traffic was again prohibited under severe penalties. Another scandal of Venetian commerce was challenged by the Greek Emperor, who in 971 sent an embassy to Venice threatening to burn cargo and crew of any vessel found trading in munitions of war with the Saracens. It was decided that no arms, or iron, or wood for naval construction should be sold to the infidels, exception being made of utensils of carved wood, such as goblets, platters and basins.

Venice and its Story

But the demons of Pride and Ambition still lurked in the unquiet breast of the Doge. Pietro forced his wife to take the veil at S. Zaccaria that he might marry Gualdrada, sister of the Marquis of Tuscany, who brought him a rich dowry of money and lands. He affected a state of Imperial magnificence, surrounded himself with mercenaries and dragged his subjects to fight for his feudal rights on the mainland. Soon the indignant populace rose in revolt and attacked the palace. Foiled in their purpose by the devotion of the Doge's foreign guards, the insurgents fired the adjacent houses and drove the doomed prince to seek safety by a passage that led into the atrium of St Mark's. Here he was met by a company of Venetian nobles to whom he prayed: "And have you, too, my brothers, willed my destruction; if I have sinned in word or deed, grant me life and I will remedy all." There was an angry shout: "He is worthy of death," and a dozen weapons were plunged into his breast. Pietro's infant son was spitted on a spear in its nurse's arms; the hated mercenaries were slain; the bodies of father and babe were carried to the shambles, and only redeemed by the entreaties of a saintly monk who removed them for burial to the abbey of S. Ilario.

In a city built mainly of wood, fire is a disastrous weapon. Their vengeance glutted, the revolutionists turned to count the cost, and were sobered. The churches of St Theodore, St Mark and S. Maria Zobenigo, the ducal palace, three hundred houses and a large number of factories were destroyed. It was a subdued assembly that met in S. Pietro on August 12th, 976, and elected Pietro Orseolo, a rich patrician descended from an ancient Roman family of the earliest settlers in Torcello. Threats of Imperial vengeance hung over the Republic, and Gualdrada's claims for compensation had to be met. For this, and to rebuild the city, a subsidy of a decima was voted to be imposed on the property of each citizen. Artificers were brought from Constantinople, and plans for a new St Mark's¹ and a new palace made. The Doge dedicated nearly all his patrimony to the building; founded a hospital for the sick poor near the Campanile, and spent much time as well as money in works of charity. Orseolo soon grew weary of the cares of state, and an opportune visit of the Abbot of St Michael's in Aquitaine to Venice confirmed his desire to enter a cloister. He asked for time to prepare. The abbot promised to return and claim him. A year later, on a September night, the abbot and two friars repaired to the monastery of S. Ilario, where they were met by the Doge, his son-in-law and a friend, disguised as pilgrims. They were ferried across the lagoon, horses were in waiting on the mainland, and at full speed the party rode for France. On the morrow the Venetians awoke to find their beloved prince fled and the ducal chair vacant.

Flight of a Doge

¹ Pietro Orseolo in his two years of office could have done little more than repair the old St Mark's. Recent researches have proved that the present structure was begun in 1063 under Doge Contarini by a Greek architect on the model of the Church of the Holy Apostles at Constantinople, demolished by Mohamed II. in 1464. Part of the ducal palace was pulled down to extend the basilica southwards. Much of Participazio's old Chapel and part of the Church of St Theodore were incorporated in the new building. When the wall which separates the Chapel of St Isidore from the north transept was stripped of its marble casing in 1887 it showed a bare surface of brick blackened by exposure to the weather and one of the windows which lighted the south aisle of old St Theodore's. In 1885, the ancient wall and the antae of the narthex of the original chapel were also discovered. The main structure was probably completed at Contarini's death in 1070, and his successor, Domenico Selvo, began the decoration which took two centuries to complete. The floral work of the galleries and pinnacles is early fourteenth century.

Venice and its Story

The Candiani, who had never ceased intriguing to regain power, were ready, and their nominee, Vitale Candiano, was raised to the Dogeship, to retire after fourteen months, sick and disillusioned, to die in a monastery. In 978 he was succeeded by Pietro Memo, a feeble prince, whose reign was dishonoured by the rise of the Caloprini and Morosini factions that in the end nearly compassed the destruction of Venetian liberties. It was the old strife renewed with increased bitterness. The Morosini being partisans of the Orseoli favoured the Byzantines: the Caloprini standing for the Candiani leaned on the western powers. For the first and last time in her history Venice saw her children traitorously inviting a foreign sovereign to enslave their fatherland. The Caloprini, having assassinated Domenico Morosini, fled to the court of Otho II., and impiously laying bare the weak places in their country's defences, called him to conquest. The Emperor was nothing loth. Venice was a standing challenge to the Empire; the only state in Western Europe that stubbornly refused to be absorbed in the feudal system. His subjects were forbidden to trade with the Republic; her food supplies were cut off; her enemies goaded on to attack her; the Caloprini faction in Venice stirred to rebellion; ships of war collected to blockade if not to attack the islands. It was the gravest danger that had ever threatened Venice, for the foes were partly those of her own household. But the stars, which watched over her birth, seemed now in their courses to fight for her salvation; the mighty arm of the Emperor was raised to crush the little state, when the angel of death touched him and it fell impotently to his side.

At this epoch arose to guide her destinies one of the greatest princes that ever sat in the ducal chair. Memo, suspected of complicity in a more than usually atrocious assassination, was deposed and forced to enter a monastery, and in 991 Pietro Orseolo II. began his eventful reign. By his consummate statesmanship the Republic soon found herself at peace with east and west and able to deal with the problem of the Adriatic pirates. The Doge at once abolished the feeble expedient of paying blackmail to their chiefs, and on a renewal of their depredations chastised them into respect. The unhappy borderland along the Dalmatian coast, nominally under the lordship of the eastern Empire, but actually eluding control by east or west, was dotted with a number of small trading communities—Zara, Trau, Spalato, and Ragusa—continually harassed by Slav and Saracen pirates from the sea and by Croats on land. The defeated pirates in their rage now united with the Croats and turned on the Dalmatians, who appealed to Venice, the only power which seemed able to protect them. The Doge at once grasped the importance to Venetian commerce of a protectorate over Dalmatia. The greatest fleet that had hitherto sailed from Venetian waters set forth with banners consecrated by the Church to police the Adriatic.

Conquest of Dalmatia

The voyage was a triumphant procession. Chief after chief submitted; at Zara and elsewhere the Venetians were magnificently received; the last stronghold of the pirates, impregnable Lagosta, yielded to the splendid courage of the Venetian seamen; Slavs and Croats were cowed and hostages given for future good behaviour, and the woods of Curzola made Venice independent of Italy for timber. It was the first stage in her development as a European power. The title of Doge of Dalmatia was now added to that of Doge of Venice and a ceremony instituted which a hundred and eighty years later became the famous Sposalizio del Mare or Wedding of the Adriatic.

VINE PERGOLA ON THE GIUDECCA

Conquest of Dalmatia

On the morning of Ascension Day a State barge covered with cloth of gold bearing the clergy of the Chapter of St Mark's in full canonicals and furnished with a vessel of water, a vase of salt and an aspersoir of olive branches, sailed to the Canal of S. Nicolo del Lido to await the Doge's barge, called later the Bucintoro. On its arrival two Canons intoned the litany and the Bishop rose up and solemnly pronounced in Latin the words: Deign, O Lord, to grant that this sea be calm and peaceful to us and to all that sail upon it; thus we pray, O Lord hear us! The Bishop blessed the water and, having reached S. Nicolo, drew near to the Doge's barge before the procession advanced into the open Adriatic. The Primicerio then prayed: Purge me, O Lord, with hyssop, and I shall be clean; the Bishop aspersed the Doge and his suite, and poured what was left of the water into the sea. Such was the origin of the famous festa of La Sensa of which we shall hear more later.

The fame of the Doge's exploits had fired the imagination of the young and ardent Emperor Otho III., who made a mysterious voyage by night to the great Orseolo at Venice and, disguised in mean attire, went about the strange city marvelling at the glories of its architecture. The new ducal palace had just been completed—a stately embattlemented edifice, in which was constructed a small chapel rich in precious marble and gold and furnished with an organ of wondrous craftsmanship. A romantic affection sprang up between the two potentates which was cemented by the Emperor standing god-father and giving his name to one of the Doge's sons. The friends parted, after much intimate converse, embracing each other and in tears.

Honours too from the East were lavished upon the Doge. Responding to an appeal from the Greeks he led a fleet to Bari, which was invested by the Saracens.

Venice and its Story

Signs and wonders in the heavens heralded his coming, and after three days of hand-to-hand fighting the siege was raised and a Greek army delivered from destruction. The Byzantine Emperor showed his gratitude by bestowing the hand of his niece on the Doge's son Giovanni, and joyous festival was made at Constantinople in honour of the alliance. But whatever pride may have been engendered in the Doge's breast by this almost more than mortal success was soon chastened by failing health, affliction at home, and the desolation wrought by plague and famine in the city. Rich in piety and charity this noble and heroic servant of the people declined to his end, and at the early age of forty-eight was laid to rest in S. Zaccaria.

The story of the enrichment of this church with the body of S. Tarasio is too characteristic to be passed by. We tell it in Sanudo's words. In the year 1019 some Venetian merchants, with whom was a certain priest of Malamocco, disembarked at a promontory called Chiledro. The priest and two companions went into a deserted monastery and heard a voice crying Tolle hoc corpus sanctum et defer tecum (Take this holy body and bear it away with thee). He looked around and finding no monument prayed to God for guidance, and soon discerned an altar inscribed, "This body of S. Tarasio shalt thou find wrapped in a cloth." He then turned and saw a cave in which lay the body with four lights burning before it. Now the said priest was sorely hurt in one of his hands, which he carried in a sling, and having entered the cave he at once became whole. As he raised the body, which weighed nought, so light it was, a voice proceeded from it saying, Tolle me quia tecum venire præsto sum (Take me, for I am ready to come with thee). They carried the body to the ship, three miles distant, and lo, there came some monks running apace and crying, "Cruel men, give us back our father; ye shall not depart hence if ye restore him not to us, for once on a time a strange people came and stole a tooth of the saint and never could they depart until they had returned the same to us." But the Venetians caring nought for such words set sail for Venice, and, though the ship was heavy laden, she sailed light as a bird over the sea, so precious a treasure she bore.

Rape of S. Tarasio's Body

Otho Orseolo, who succeeded his father in 1008, by overweening ambition, drew on himself the ill-will of the people. God-son of an Emperor, brother-in-law of the sainted King Stephen of Hungary, he promoted one of his brothers to the patriarchate of Grado (next to the dogeship the most important position in the state), and another to the see of Torcello. The Patriarchs of Aquileia and of Grado had long been at bitter enmity, and more than once had fought out their quarrels with all too secular weapons. During the Lombard dominion the Patriarchs of Aquileia were tainted with the Arian heresy, whereas those of Grado remained orthodox and claimed jurisdiction over the whole of the lagoons. Moreover, the growing power and wealth of the latter aroused the jealousy of their rivals. The Aquileian Pastor was generally a German by race and sympathies, and subject to the Empire, while the Patriarch of Grado was subject to Venice.¹ The Pastor of Aquileia now organised the popular discontent, and drove his rival of Grado and the Doge to exile in Istria; but the horrors wrought in Grado by this warlike churchman, who added perjury to ferocity to accomplish his vengeance, brought about a reaction in the Doge's favour, and he was recalled;

¹ In 1456 the see of Castello and the patriarchate of Grado were united, and S. Lorenzo Giustiniano was made first Patriarch of Venice.

Venice and its Story

only, however, to wreck himself again on the iron-bound determination of the Venetians never to be subject to a feudal prince, and he was again exiled. For Venice was founded by citizens of the Roman Empire, with traditions of municipal freedom and imperial dominion, to whom the feudal system of the German conquerors of Italy was alien and hateful.

Otho's successor, Domenico Centranico, elected in 1026, was unable to rule the storm, and after an ineffectual reign of six years was shorn of his beard and sent to Constantinople. Again the Venetians turned to the twice-exiled Otho and an honourable embassy was sent to invite his return—only, however, to find him beyond the reach of earthly honours. In the political confusion another Orseoli usurped power for a day, and was chased to Ravenna by the people, whose hatred of the Orseoli was now so fierce that the whole family were ostracised and laws enacted which finally blocked any tendency in the dominant families to form a dynasty.

Under Domenico Flabianico who was raised to the ducal chair in 1032, an Arengo was called, and after the acts of the Doges for the past three hundred years, their ungovernable ambitions and tragic ends had been recapitulated, it was decided to abolish association and hereditary succession. Two ducal councillors were appointed to assist the Doge in the discharge of the ordinary duties of his office, and in extraordinary matters of grave public importance he was compelled to invite the more prominent and experienced citizens to his council. By these two momentous constitutional changes that paring away of the Doge's powers was begun which in the end made of him little more than a figurehead, and gave free play to the evolution of the most capable and most powerful oligarchy in history. It is easy to trace in the two consiglieri ducali the beginnings of the Ducal Council, and in the "Invited" (Pregadi) the Senate, or meeting of the Pregadi. The objects of the reformers were effected: during the reigns (a period of thirty-eight years) of Flabianico and of Domenico Contarini, the fury of ecclesiastical jealousy alone disturbed the state.

Limitation of the Doge's Power

That the choice of the Doge was still democratic in form is clear from an interesting description by an eye-witness, Domenico Tina, of the election of Doge Domenico Selvo in 1071. An immense multitude of citizens came in boats and armed galleys to an assembly on the island of Castello; and while the clergy and the monks from the Abbey of S. Nicolo, founded on the Lido in the previous reign, were praying in St Peter's for divine guidance, a mighty shout rose from the people, Noi volemo dose Domenigo Selvo e lo laudiamo (We desire and approve Dom. Selvo for Doge). Selvo was seized by a company of nobles and borne shoulder high to his barge, where he bared his feet that he might enter St Mark's in due humility. Tina, who was on Selvo's boat, intoned the Te Deum; a thousand voices joined him and a thousand oars lashed the waters into foam. From all the churches bells pealed as the Doge alighted and was carried to St Mark's, where the clergy met him and such psalmody and acclamation were raised that the very domes of the chapel seemed like to burst with the noise. The Doge entered and prostrated himself to the ground, giving thanks to God and to St Mark for the honour conferred upon him. Having taken the insignia of office from the altar he proceeded to the palace, followed by an immense concourse of people, who in accordance with usage looted the palace of its furniture and received largess from the new Doge.

Selvo's popularity was not, however, shared by his consort, a Greek princess, who shocked the simpler tastes of the Venetians by her oriental luxury. Not only was she said to bathe in dew and scent her robes with costly perfumes, she was of tanta delicatezza that she would not touch food with her fingers, but made use of certain two-pronged instruments of gold to carry it to her mouth. The outraged Divine Majesty, say the chroniclers, punished her by the infliction of a loathsome disease and she sickened into such corruption that none could be found to tend her.

Venice and its Story

CHAPTER III

Expansion in the East—Reconciliation of Pope Alexander III. and the Emperor Barbarossa—The Wedding of the Adriatic

“ All the golden cities Overflowing with honey

Say, lords, should not our thoughts be first to commerce.”

—Blake.

ONE of the most remarkable figures of mediæval history is that of Robert Guiscard, son of a poor Norman knight, who with a handful of military adventurers carved out for himself a great duchy in South Italy, founded a race of kings, defeated the Emperors of East and West, and in his colossal ambition aimed at nothing less than uniting in his person the divided Empire of the Romans. In 1081 Alexius Comnenos, the Greek Emperor, hard pressed at Durazzo by the puissant duke's forces, appealed to Venice for help and promised valuable trading privileges in return. She responded to the call, and a great armata of sixty-three sail under the command of the Doge appeared before the besieged city and by masterly strategy and strenuous fighting defeated the Normans. But Duke Robert was not easily crushed and in 1084 Alexius was constrained to pay the inevitable price of further commercial favours for another naval contingent from Venice. Doge Selvo with a fleet of great ships and 13,000 men fell upon the Normans near Corfu. Victory inclined to the Venetians at first, but in the end they were overwhelmed by Robert's fierce onslaught. The huge towering galleons of the islanders were involved in hopeless confusion, and as the Normans pressed on to cut down the Venetian sailors, Robert tempted them by promising to spare the lives of those who would enter his service. "Know, Duke Robert," answered the devoted Venetians, "that if we saw our wives and children slain before our eyes we would not break troth with Alexius." Robert, admiring their loyalty, suffered them to be held for redemption. Selvo reached Venice in November with a remnant of his shattered fleet and a loss of 6000 men; before a month was past he was deposed by a popular rising whose chief instigator, Vitale Falier, lifted himself up to the ducal chair. Unhappy Doge Selvo's memory is, however, enshrined in St Mark's, for he it was who set himself to adorn the edifice with marble incrustations, columns of porphyry and other precious stones, mosaic and painting.

Venice and its Story

The naval supremacy of Venice was essential to her existence, and one of the first acts of Falier was to collect a fleet more powerful than any that had yet left the lagoons, and in the spring of 1085 the shame of defeat was wiped out by a great victory over the Normans on the scene of the former engagement. In a few months plague had quenched for ever the fiery spirit of Duke Robert, and Alexius had leisure to reward the Venetians. The Doge's title of Duke of Dalmatia was formally recognised and that of Augustus added; trading franchises and exemption from customs were granted in all the parts of the Eastern Empire; lands and factories were assigned to them and a Venetian quarter was founded in Constantinople. The first grip of the young Republic was laid on the capital of the Greeks and never relaxed until she had overthrown their empire and fixed herself there—victorious and dominant.

Expansion in the East

In 1094, the new Church of St Mark was ready for consecration; but it was a casket void of its treasure. For since the great fire of 976 all traces of the Saint's body had been lost and great was the affliction of Doge and people: it was decided to institute a solemn fast and procession, and to supplicate the Eternal Majesty to reveal the hidden relic. On the 25th day of June, while the procession of Doge, clergy and people was slowly pacing St Mark's, a great light shone from a pillar near the altar of St James, part of the masonry fell away, a hand was thrust out with a ring of gold on the middle finger and a sweet fragrance was diffused throughout the church; "nor could any draw this ring off" (says Sanudo¹) "save Giovanni Delfino, counsellor to the Doge, whose descendants a few years ago gave it to the Scuola di S. Marco. The body being found," continues the diarist, "the whole city was filled with joy and gave thanks to the eternal God for having restored so great a treasure. On the 8th of October the said church, which of old was called St Theodore, was consecrated in the name of St Mark, and in the presence alone of the Doge, the Bishop, the primicerio and the procurator of St Mark, the body was placed (as it is famed) in the high altar of the said church. And Bernardo Giustiniani maketh mention in his history that he being once procurator, it was told him in great secrecy where the said body lay, and that in very truth it was in the said church."²

¹ Writing about 1500-1520.

² On the 6th of May 1811 the body was rediscovered in a marble tomb in the crypt, with a few coins, a gold ring minus its jewel; a lamina with the date October 8, 1094, and the name of Vitale Falier.

Venice and its Story

A great festival was instituted to commemorate the discovery, and the fame of the miracle drew many pilgrims to Venice, among whom was Henry IV., Emperor of the West, who combining piety with statecraft, paid his devotions to the Saint and courted the favour of the Republic, whose help, or at least neutrality, he needed in his wars with the papacy to avenge the humiliation of Canossa.¹ The Emperor was magnificently received and, after admiring the beauty of the architecture and the wonderful site of the city, he left having added many privileges to those already enjoyed by the Venetian merchants in his dominions. In 1096 Vitale Falier died, and on Christmas day was buried in the portico of St Mark's. The people, whom the devastation wrought by tempest, earthquake and famine² had made unjust, ran to the church and cast bread and wine at the tomb, cursing and saying: "Sate thee now, who in life wouldest not provide plenty for thy people."

Towards the close of the 11th century harrowing stories of the atrocities committed by the Saracen conquerors of Palestine on Christian pilgrims, and the impassioned oratory of Peter the Hermit had fired the West with a desire to cleanse the Holy Land from the pollution of the infidel. Wave after wave of unorganised enthusiasm broke against the forces of nature and the military prowess of the Saracens, until at length the epic story of the conquest of Jerusalem by the organised Chivalry of Christendom rang through Europe. The Venetians, who aimed at something more solid than the gratification of religious

¹ The memorable triumph of the papacy when the Emperor was made to stand barefoot in the bitter January cold outside the castle of Canossa for three days, before Pope Gregory VII. would admit and absolve him.

² Two-thirds of the people were said to have perished.

Expansion in the East

emotion, looked on unmoved, until an appeal came to the maritime states of Italy to furnish transports for the crusaders and pilgrims who were flocking to the East. Doge Vitale Michieli, who had succeeded Vitale Falier, called an assembly in St Mark's, appealed to the religious zeal of the people and dwelt on the unwisdom of permitting their rivals of Pisa and Genoa to forestall them again and increase their power in the East. Commercial interest and state policy left them no choice; a fleet was manned and after solemn mass at St Mark's the expedition set sail, bearing the consecrated banner of the Cross, under the command of the Doge's son Giovanni and the Bishop of Castello. But the Greek Emperor, ever fearful of the whole movement, incited the Pisans to attack the Venetians, and a fierce battle between the rival armaments at Rhodes disgraced the Christian host. The Venetians were victorious and continued their voyage. A call was made at Myra, where lay the body of St Nicholas, patron saint of mariners, which the Bishop had long coveted for the Abbey of St Nicolo on the Lido. Having learnt from his spies that the city was almost deserted, the worthy prelate proceeded to the church accompanied by some sailors, and demanded of the custodians where the body of the saint was. They replied that they knew not, and indicated an old tomb, saying that some relics were there and some had been removed, and the Bishop might have what he could find. The sailors working day and night broke open the tomb and found nought save some oil and water; whereupon the Bishop, waxing very wroth, put the four custodians to the torture, who cried: "Wherefore dost thou afflict us, verily in the altar of St John are two bodies of saints." The altar being opened two chests were found with inscriptions saying they contained the bodies of St Theodore the Martyr and St Nicholas the Less. The spoilers were about to depart when a sailor, by "divine inspiration," turned back to look again at the rifled tomb, and lo, an odour of such great sweetness came forth that surely, he said, there must lie some relic of great worth. The sailors dug deeper and came upon a third chest with an inscription in Greek saying: "Here rests the great Nicholas, who wrought wonders on land and sea." The three chests were carried abroad with great devotion, and the fleet went its way to the Holy Land. The Venetians assisted in the capture of Caifa, and on St Michael's Day returned laden with the bodies of the saints and much spoil. Meanwhile their interests in the West had not been neglected: for help afforded to the Countess Matilda in Ferrara the usual reward of trading privileges in that city was given.

Venice and its Story

In 1104, the third year of the reign of Ordelafo Falier, a Doge, "young in years but old in wisdom," came a summons from Baldwin, King of Jerusalem, for a Venetian naval contingent. A fleet of more than a hundred sail was despatched, which, after contributing to the victory of Jaffa and to the capture of Sidon, swept the sea of pirates. The Venetians exacted important concessions—a quarter of the conquered city; their own church, bakery and mill; a market-place; exemption from customs, taxes and dues; the right to use their own weights and measures; and a yearly tribute in money from the king. They were also to be subject to their own laws.

But at home evil days had fallen upon Venice. An awful tempest and inundation wrought havoc in the city; houses and factories were levelled to the ground; Malamocco, the ancient capital, was engulfed in the sea. Scarcely had the unhappy citizens recovered from their terror when two disastrous fires consumed a great part of the city: thirty churches were destroyed, and the ducal palace and St Mark's injured. Abroad, the King of Hungary attacked their protectorate of Dalmatia, and the fleet was recalled from the East. It had done what was expected of it. A certain Friar Peter being at Constantinople heard that the body of St Stephen, the proto-martyr, was in a church there, and "found means to obtain it." The fleet was in the harbour, and the sacred treasure put on board, not without opposition from the Greeks, who were with great difficulty restrained from attacking the bearers. A great procession went forth to meet the fleet as it neared Venice, and the Doge himself transferred the holy burden on his shoulders to the ducal barge. Many churches contended for the possession of the relic, which at length was conferred on the rich Benedictine Abbey of S. Giorgio Maggiore, founded in the year 982.

THE SQUERO, S. TROVASO

D

Venice and its Story

The Bishop of Castello, who had been sent to Constantinople to plead for help in the reconquest of Dalmatia, was no less successful. As a token of the Emperor's favour, he returned with the right hand of St John the Baptist in a vase. Two armaments were sent to recover Dalmatia. In 1117, when the Venetians were wavering before a fierce attack of the Hungarians outside Zara, Falier spurred forward to hearten them; his horse stumbled on a dead body; the enemy closed on him, and he was slain—the second Doge who had met a soldier's death.

Ordelafo Falier is remembered in Venice to-day by two monuments: one of art—the famous Pala d'oro in St Mark's; the other of civic utility—the concentration of the scattered squeri or shipyards in the great Arsenal, whence issued the mighty vessels innumerable that for centuries maintained the naval supremacy of Venice. It was this Arzanà, now the Arsenale Vecchio, which Dante saw and immortalised

Expansion in the East

in the famous description of the fifth of the Malebolge :—

“ Quale nell' arzanà de' Viniziani bolle l' inverno la tenace pece a rimpalmar li lor legni non sani, che navicar non ponno, e in quella vece chi fa suo legno nuovo, e chi ristoppa le coste a quel che più viaggi fece ;

chi ribatte da proda, e chi da poppa ;
altri fa remi, ed altri volge sarte ;
chi terzeruolo ed artimon rintoppa.”¹

The first duty of Domenico Michieli, on his election in 1118, was to make peace with the King of Hungary, that he might be free to devote himself to Eastern affairs. The King of Jerusalem was a prisoner in the hands of the Saracens and a stirring appeal from the Pope for Venetian help was read in St Mark's. A year was spent in building and equipping a fleet of forty great galleys, twenty-eight transports, and many smaller craft. It was a magnificent spectacle when the vessels, painted with many colours and bright with banners, set forth bearing a gallant army of knights and footmen, their armour flashing in the sun, the banner of St Mark and the consecrated standard of the Cross waving proudly from the Doge's ship. But the captive king was to linger yet another year, for Michieli had pressing affairs nearer home : the Greek Emperor Johannes must be chastised for his unfriendly

¹ As in the arsenal of the Venetians, the sticky pitch boils in winter to daub their leaky ships which they cannot sail, and instead, one builds his ship anew, another caulks the ribs of that which many voyages hath made. One hammers at the prow and one at the poop : another makes oars : another twists the ropes : another mends the jib and mainsail. —“ Inferno,” xxi. 7-15.

Venice and its Story

attitude to Venice. The fleet anchored before Corfu and spent the winter in an attempt to capture the island. Having wreaked what damage they could and having "invoked the divine assistance," they resumed their voyage in the spring. After devastating Chios, Lesbos and Rhodes they reached Cyprus, where news came that a Saracen armament lay off Jaffa. The fleet at once pressed forward and fell upon the infidels; the Doge's galley went straight for the Emir's ship and sank it; confusion seized the enemy and a memorable victory was won. The slaughter was terrible. For years the mariners of Jaffa declared the sea to be infected with the corpses of the Saracens. The Doge was met at Jaffa by the clergy and barons of Jerusalem and borne in triumph to the holy city, where he was acclaimed as the champion of Christendom. Being urged to further service Michieli replied that nothing was nearer the hearts of the Venetians than to increase the Christian dominion in the East, and that the piety and religion which had always distinguished them was burning to express itself in deeds. In the name of the King and his barons it was agreed that of the captured cities and all spoils one-third should be the portion of the Venetians, one-third of the King, one-third of the Patriarch of Jerusalem, and that the cost of the war should be met in thirds; the trading privileges granted in Sidon were confirmed and were to be extended to all future conquests. A hot discussion arose as to whether Tyre or Ascalon should be the objective of the next expedition: it was decided to cast lots, and a boy drew from the urn the word "Tyre."

The capture by the Venetians and Franks of Tyre, mother of Carthage, "the mart of nations made very glorious in the heart of the seas," is one of the epics of history. The flower of Saracen chivalry garrisoned the city, and the crusaders attacked with desperate courage: warriors of Damascus and fleets from Egypt fought in vain to raise the siege. In the alternations of the struggle murmurs were heard among the Franks of impending desertion by the Venetian fleet. The Doge, when the report came to his ears, had a plank knocked out of the side of each ship and borne before him to the Frankish camp. With grave words he rebuked the slanderers and offered to leave those material pledges of Venetian loyalty. Towards the end of the siege money failed: the Doge cut coins of leather, promising to exchange them for good ducats when the fleet returned to Venice. After five months' resistance, famine wore down the courage of the Saracens; honourable terms of surrender were granted and the banners of the King of Jerusalem and the standard of St Mark floated over the captured city. Venice had planted her foot in Syria.

Expansion in the East

The fleet now turned westward, but its work was not yet done: Johannes had expelled the Venetian traders from the ports of the Empire, and the Greeks were to be taught another lesson. The course of the avengers through the eastern seas was marked by the ravaged cities of the Greek islands spoiled of their wealth and bemoaning their captive sons and daughters. Michieli paused in his work to recover the Dalmatian fiefs from the King of Hungary, and cities reduced to heaps of smouldering ruins bore witness to the power of Venice to vindicate her sovereignty. Reinforced from Dalmatia the victorious fleet turned again on the Greeks, who hastened to make peace and agreed to the Doge's terms. Great was the rejoicing in Venice when the triumphant Doge returned bringing the bodies of St Isidore from Chios and of S. Donato from Cephalonia, with such spoil of Eastern magnificence as had never yet been seen there since she rose from the sea. But before we leave Michieli to his retreat and death in the Monastery of S. Giorgio Maggiore, where to this day may be seen a partially obliterated epitaph to the "Terror of the Greeks and the Glory of Venice," we may record one domestic innovation worthy of grateful remembrance. Few things are more charming to the wayfarer in Venice than the little shrines of the Virgin and Child decked with flowers and lighted by night with an oil lamp in the nooks and corners of the city. Though no longer needed for their original purpose of illuminating the ways, they are still tended by the piety of the people. It was to Michieli that this provision was due, who, to aid the watchmen in ridding the dark and tortuous lanes of the thieves that infested them, and to light the city, ordered the clergy to provide for the public safety by erecting and maintaining the shrines, and empowered them to levy a rate to meet the cost.

Venice and its Story

From the retirement of Domenico Michieli to the election of Vitale Michieli II. in 1156, two Doges, Pietro Polani and Domenico Morosini, presided over the growth of the lagoon state. Despite troubles with the Adriatic pirates, with the Hungarians and the Paduans, new markets for Venetian commerce were won by the familiar process of squeezing the rival Cæsars of East and West. It was a time of building. The Campanile was finished, many churches were erected, and a hospital was founded for the mothers and widows of seamen fallen in the service of the state.

Political theories that no longer correspond to realities are dangerous in proportion to the character and genius of those whose imagination they seize upon. Actually the Roman Empire had fallen to pieces, but so faithfully had the Romans wrought that it was regarded even by the northern invaders as an integral part of civilisation. The Church accepted and sanctified it, and the Holy Roman Empire continued to exist in theory until the wit of Voltaire and the big battalions of Napoleon destroyed the sham for ever. In the poetic mind of Dante, with his passionate aspiration for peace and righteousness, it became a beautiful but ineffectual ideal of a kingship over kings; of an Emperor curbing the warring factions and states of Christendom and coercing such as threatened to break the common peace, so that the golden days of the Pax Romana might be seen of men again. But the times were making for nationality and not for empire, and the attempts of the great emperors to realise their theoretical power were foredoomed to failure.

Expansion in the East

Such an attempt was made by Frederick Barbarossa. Reports came to his ears of a rebellious and factious spirit in the south: the burgesses of the Italian cities were growing restive under the imperial vicars: Milan had attacked and wasted Lodi: the feudal princes both of Church and State were scandalised by common burghers and mechanics rising to hold public offices, and even exercising the profession of arms. Twice the Emperor descended the Alps to bring the Italian communes to subjection. For a time he was successful, but a new era was dawning in Italy. The Lombard cities banded themselves in a league whose soul was the Pope, and swore to make no peace with the Emperor until their communal rights and privileges were secured. Venice, true to her policy of facing both ways, at first held aloof; but later, fearing her turn might come next, promised naval and financial aid to the league. The struggle continued until 1176, when the flower of German chivalry bit the dust before the stout burghers of the Lombard League at Legnano.

Frederick, to punish the Venetians for their support of the League and of Alexander III. against the imperial nominees for the papal chair, moved their arch enemy the Patriarch of Aquileia to attack Grado. He was defeated by the Doge and taken captive to Venice. With twelve of his canons the Patriarch purchased liberty by undertaking to pay a yearly tribute of a fine bull, twelve pigs, twelve loaves of bread, and a quantity of wine. A quaint ceremony marked the reception of the tribute. The Doge with a train of nobles repaired to the ducal palace, where he struck down certain wooden castles with a wand. Then in the presence of the Doge and his suite a bull-fight took place in the Piazza; the pigs were beheaded, cut in pieces, and distributed among the nobles. At later celebrations a youth by an ingenious contrivance flew down from the top of the Campanile to the balcony of the ducal palace and presented a nosegay to the Doge. In Leonardo Loredano's time the number of recipients had so increased that it was decided to distribute the pigs among the monasteries, and the bread and wine were given to the prisons. Subsequently the bulls were increased to three, the hunt was discontinued and the animals were decollated at one stroke of a heavy sword to the sound of drums and trumpets. The ceremony was performed as late as the eighteenth century and is described by an English traveller as a butchery rather than a diversion.

Venice and its Story

In 1171, a few ships, all that remained of a fine merchant fleet in Constantinople, sailed up the lagoons and roused the Venetians to fury by the recital of a wanton attack on their countrymen in the East. All the Venetians in the ports of the Empire had been seized by order of the Emperor Manuel, cast into prison, and their property confiscated. The Emperor had been secretly gathering his forces, and by leaning on the Genoese felt strong enough to pay off old scores. An irresistible wave of popular indignation swept the state into a war with the Eastern Empire, and to meet the cost a forced loan of one per cent. on property was levied, a national bank formed, and state bonds were issued for the amount of the loan bearing interest at four per cent. These securities were quoted daily on the Rialto according to the fluctuations of the market, and formed the first funded debt in Europe. In six months the Doge set forth with a magnificent fleet and the flower of Venetian manhood; but he wasted precious time in a punitive attack on Ragusa, and while besieging the capital of Negropont, the ancient Eubœa, weakly agreed to treat with the Emperor. The subtle Greeks temporised with the Venetian envoys, one of whom, Enrico Dandolo, we shall hear of again. Winter came, and a terrible pestilence wasted the Venetian forces. So great was the mortality that the Giustiniani perished to a man, and the last scion of this noble house was permitted to leave the cloister in order to marry the Doge's daughter and save his name from extinction. Having raised up several sons, his wife retired to a convent and he to his cell at S. Nicolo del Lido to fulfil his interrupted vow. Before a year was past the unhappy Doge and all that remained of the expedition returned to Venice; the city became infected with the plague, and the angry people turned upon the Doge, who fled for refuge to S. Zaccaria, but was cut down before he reached the threshold.

The Lombard League

The hasty inception and calamitous issue of this ill-omened war profoundly impressed the aristocracy of Venice, and they determined that neither popular passion nor ducal ineptitude should again sway the policy of the state. In 1172 the supersession of the democratic element and the further curtailment of the ducal privileges were effected by an elaborately-conceived constitution, which gave the shadow of power to the people and the substance to the aristocracy. Each of the six wards (sestieri) of the city was to elect two representatives, who were each to appoint forty of the chief citizens of their respective wards to form a great Council of four hundred and eighty members. The Council sat for a year, and when its term was completed, it, not the wards, nominated the twelve who were to appoint the Council for the following year. The Council was to elect the officers of state, including the Doge, who was chosen by eleven of its members delegated for that purpose. Further to control the Doge the two privy councillors instituted in 1032 were increased to six.

N. ERICHSEN.

The Constitution of 1172

The constitution of 1172 narrowly escaped a baptism of blood. When the new Doge, Sebastiano Ziani, was presented for popular approbation a riot ensued, but the people were duped by an empty formula—Quest' è il vostro doge se vi piacerà (This is your Doge if it be your pleasure)—and debauched by a more abundant distribution of largess and a more gorgeous pageant.

The state of the finances no less than affairs on the mainland impelled the Republic to come to terms with Manuel. To strengthen her hands an alliance was sought with the Normans, and again we find Enrico Dandolo an ambassador, this time at the Court of Sicily. Barbarossa was now wearying of the struggle with the papacy. Like Henry IV., he found his legions powerless against a feeble old man armed with the impalpable weapons of the spiritual power. He had set up three schismatic popes, seized the very seat of Peter at Rome, and driven Alexander III., a wanderer and a suppliant, to the Courts of Europe. The indomitable old pontiff at length found his way to Venice, all' unico domicilio di libertà, and an attempt at reconciliation was made. A splendid naval procession went to meet him, a seat of honour was prepared for him in the ducal barge between the Doge and the Patriarch, and apartments were assigned to him in the patriarchal palace at S. Silvestro. Soon it was reported that the Emperor himself was at Chioggia, and after many negotiations terms were agreed upon.¹ A bitter morsel Barbarossa was forced to swallow. The uncompromising Pope would abate no jot of his claims—the Emperor must solemnly recognise him as the true and only successor of Peter, God's vicar on earth, supreme over Cæsar.

Venice and its Story

Sunday the 24th of July 1177 was a superb day for Venice. The whole Piazza was alive with princes and peoples of many nations. Two tall masts lifting up the banners of St Mark stood at the landing-stage by the Piazzetta. The day before, the Emperor, who was not permitted to land at Venice, "until he had set aside his leonine ferocity and put on the gentleness of the lamb," was brought in great pomp from Chioggia to Lido and passed the night at the Abbey of S. Nicolo. In the early morning the Pope, having received at St Mark's the formal abjuration of the schism by the Chancellor of the Empire, solemnly absolved Barbarossa from the ban of the Church. Ziani and a great procession then set forth and brought the Emperor from Lido seated in a ducal barge between Doge and Patriarch. When he disembarked a procession was formed headed by the Doge, the Patriarch, and the clergy bearing banners and crosses, behind whom walked the Emperor. Having reached the Piazza Barbarossa beheld the Pope enthroned in full canonicals and surrounded by a throng of cardinals, archbishops, bishops, and clergy awaiting him in front

¹ The Emperor complained much of the mosquitoes and other less volatile vermin at Chioggia. Dare we assume that these irritants were not without effect in hastening the conclusion?

Reconciliation of Pope and Emperor of the atrium of St Mark's.¹ "Touched by the Holy Spirit" he cast off his purple cloak, bowed his neck, and prostrated himself at the Pope's feet, "venerating God in Alexander." The pontiff then arose, stretched forth his hand, raised Barbarossa, gave him the kiss of peace and blessed him. The air shook with the pealing of bells and the singing of the Te Deum by the Germans; the doors of St Mark swung open; the Emperor, giving his right hand to the Pope, led him to the altar and, having received his benediction, returned to the Ducal Palace. The next day at Barbarossa's request a solemn mass was sung in St Mark's by the Pope. The Emperor laid aside his mantle, took a wand, expelled the laity from the choir and led the aged Alexander to the altar protecting him from the crowd: himself sat in the choir amid the clergy, and devoutly and humbly listened to mass. At the sermon the Pope, observing the Emperor close by the pulpit, ordered the patriarch of Aquileia to translate the sermon from Latin into German. The credo having been sung, Barbarossa approached the Pope's feet, made his oblations, and at the end of mass took Alexander's hand, led him to his white horse and held the stirrup while he mounted. The Pope permitted Barbarossa to go no further, dismissed him and gave him his blessing. The successful accomplishment of this reconciliation added great lustre to the Venetian state. Never had she stood so high in the eyes of Europe. Nor were more solid gains lacking. Making the best of both worlds she received valuable privileges both spiritual and political before Pope and Cæsar left her shores.

Many were the legends that clustered round this dramatic scene. Stories were told in later days of the fugitive Pope arriving in Venice, in mean attire, wandering about the tortuous ways until overcome by fatigue he lay down and slept on the bare ground near the Church of S. Apollinare. When rested he wandered on until he was received in the monastery of the Carità, where he served six months as a common scullion. A Venetian who had been on a pilgrimage to Rome recognised him; the Doge was advised and the Pope led to the palace in great pomp: to this day near the Church of S. Apollinare an inscription marks the legendary spot where "Alexander III. reposed when fleeing from the violence of Frederick the Emperor." Frederick then bade the Venetians, so runs the fable, deliver up the fugitive or he would plant his eagles in St Mark, where they had never been before; to which the Doge retorted that the Venetians would not wait for him, and on learning that a fleet of seventy-five ships under the Emperor's son, Otho, was under sail for Venice, set forth with thirty-four galleys, attacked the imperial fleet, captured forty vessels, sunk two, and made Otho prisoner. In the great scene before St Mark's Barbarossa was imagined lying prostrate on the ground, Alexander placing his heel on the imperial neck and saying: "I will tread on the asp and on the basilisk." To which the Emperor objected: "Not to thee but to Peter"; to be quickly answered by the Pope: "Both to me and to Peter."

¹ "Ante cujus atrium": not inside as so often asserted. The scene inside is described by the Archbishop of Salerno who was present. See "Muratori, Rer. Ital.," Scrip. vii.

Venice and its Story

The festival of La Sensa was celebrated during Alexander's stay at Venice. The pontiff on that occasion handed a consecrated ring to the Doge saying: "Receive this as a pledge of the sovereignty which you and your successors shall have in perpetuity over the sea." Henceforth the ceremony was held with added magnificence, and became the greatest of

COLUMNS OF SS. MARK AND THEODORE

Venice and its Story

the many pageants for which Venice was so famous. On his gilded barge, the Bucintoro, commanded by three admirals and many captains of the fleet, and impelled by the arms of one hundred and sixty shipwrights from the arsenal, four to each oar, stood the Doge surrounded by the Patriarch and clergy, the great officers of state and the foreign ambassadors, the standard of St Mark waving over their heads. A great procession of gilded galleys and gondolas, bright with flags, followed the Doge to the island of St Helena where a collation of peeled chestnuts and red wine was offered by the Bishop of Castello and his clergy, while the Doge presented damask roses in a silver cup. One he took himself and distributed the others to his suite. The Bucintoro then swept through the Porto of the Lido into the open Adriatic; the Patriarch blessed the ring and handed it to the Doge who cast it into the sea pronouncing the formula: "Sea, we wed thee in token of our true and perpetual dominion over thee." From the musicians' gallery on the barge rang out a joyous theme, and the Doge returned to the Molo after having heard mass at S. Nicolo. In the evening a banquet was given at the Ducal Palace to the admirals and the hundred masters of the arsenal, the chief magistrates and the ambassadors; a great fair was held and the city gave itself up to a week's festivities. Such with some modifications in detail was the famous wedding of the Adriatic, which ended only with the Republic herself in 1797.

Among the spoil from Syria were three huge granite columns, one of which had fallen into the canal during unloading: the other two lay on the shore, and no one could be found to raise them. A proclamation was made that any onestà grazia would be granted to the master who should erect them on the piazzetta. Many had tried and failed when Nicolo Barattieri, a Lombard engineer, offered his services. He is said to have stretched stout ropes, soaked them in water and fixed them to the pillars.¹ As the ropes dried and contracted, the columns "with great art and some little assistance" were slowly elevated and later were surmounted with the familiar bronze and marble statues of the Lion of St Mark and St Theodore. The former was cast and erected in 1178, the latter carved and erected in 1329. When asked to name his reward, Nicolo begged permission to set up gaming-tables between the columns. His request was granted, but orders were given that all public executions should henceforth take place there, and the "two red columns"² have a gruesome interest in subsequent Venetian history. The same ingenious master is said to have erected the first wooden Rialto bridge in 1173. Two unsuccessful attempts, one in 1559, another in 1809, were made to recover the third pillar.

Election of Enrico Dandolo

On Ziani's retirement the method of electing the Doge was again modified. Instead of the eleven, four members of the Great Council were chosen who nominated an electoral college of forty. Only a single member might be taken from any one family, and the forty elected the Doge by an absolute majority of votes.

When the papal summons came to Venice in the reign of Ziani's successor, Mastropiero, for a naval contingent in the service of the third Crusade, she held too great a stake in Syria to remain wholly indifferent. Manuel promised satisfaction for the spoliation of the Venetians in 1177 by the payment of a large indemnity, and the long struggle with the Hungarians for the recovery of Zara and the Dalmatian protectorate was intermitted. A fleet was sent to the east which bore a brave part in the relief of Tyre and the famous two years' siege of Acre. But Venice fought in conjunction with her rivals of Pisa and Genoa, and it was not until the barons of France, during the organisation of the fourth Crusade gave her the opportunity of demonstrating her naval supremacy, and of controlling the movement for her own ends, that she put forth all her strength.

¹ A similar story is however told of the raising of the great obelisk at Rome.

² Actually one is of red, the other of grey granite.

Venice and its Story

Enrico Dandolo, now an old man of more than four score years, was made Doge in 1193. On his election he was made to subscribe to a Promissione ducale (coronation oath), an ingenious instrument designed in the interests of the aristocracy, which defined and limited his powers. Dandolo had inherited the Dalmatian trouble, and was occupied with stubborn Zara, which for the fourth time had resisted the efforts of the Venetians to recover it from the King of Hungary, when a wail of distress from the hard-pressed Christians in Palestine reached the ears of the great Pope Innocent III. and the fourth crusade was launched.

CHAPTER IV

Enrico Dandolo and the Capture of Constantinople

“ August pleasant Dandolo

Worshipping hearts about him for a wall,
Conducted blind eyes hundred years and all
Through vanquished Byzant, where friends note for him
What pillar, marble massive, sardius slim,
’Twere fittest to transport to Venice’ square.”

—Browning.

THE fourth crusade afforded Venice an opportunity of rising to a commanding position in Europe, and she seized it with resolution yet with the cautious deliberation so characteristic of her temper. Amid the fervent enthusiasm of the crusaders she kept a cool head, ever intent on directing the movement to the attainment of her secular policy—the extension of her commerce and of her dominion in the East.

The story of the conquest of Constantinople has been told for us by one who played a leading rôle in the drama, Jeffrey of Villehardouin, Marshal of Champagne, one of the six envoys sent by the organisers of the crusade to Venice to treat for the transport of the army to the East. He was a man of simple piety and singleness of purpose, a heroic soldier and capable administrator, but, like his fellows, no match for the shrewd old Doge who then directed the policy of the republic. It is difficult to say how far the almost cynical exploitation of the crusaders’ enthusiasm, charged upon Venice by some historians, was redeemed by nobler motives. The policy of making the best of both worlds is not a modern invention, and states as well as individuals are moved by mixed impulses. To the Doge and his councillors it may well have seemed that the expansion of the Venetian Republic and the cause of Christendom were not incompatible. Certain it is that this, the finest armament that ever set sail to wrest the Holy Land from the infidel, was diverted by Venetian policy to an attack on the possessions of a Christian prince, himself a crusader and, after wasting a precious year, melted away in a wanton conquest and spoliation of the capital of Eastern Christendom, and in the attempt to maintain there a Franco-Venetian Empire.

Venice and its Story

In February 1201 the envoys reached Venice and laid their request before the Doge. A delay of three days was asked. On the fourth day they entered the ducal palace, qui mult ere riches et biaux (which was very rich and beautiful), and found the Doge seated in the midst of his Council. They prayed his help on behalf of the high barons of France who had taken the cross to avenge the shame of Jesus and to reconquer Jerusalem, for no people were so mighty on sea or so powerful to further their cause. They entreated him in the name of God to have pity on the land beyond the sea and on the shame of Jesus Christ, and lend them warships and transports. "This," replied the Doge, "is a great thing you ask," and begged eight days' interval for reflection. In due time the terms on which help would be forthcoming were stated. Venice would furnish transports for 4500 horses and 9000 esquires, ships for 4500 knights and 20,000 footmen, with provisions for nine months. The sum asked was 85,000 marks in silver of the standard of Cologne and the terms were to hold good for one year from the day of the departure of the Armata, "to do the service of God and of Christianity in whatsoever place it may befall." The

Enrico Dandolo

Republic would add on her own part fifty armed galleys on condition that of the conquests "which we shall make on land or sea we shall have the one half and you the other." The envoys requested a day's delay. They took counsel by night and in the morning came before the Doge and agreed to the terms. "The Doge," writes Jeffrey, "summoned the Senate and Great Council, and by his great wisdom and clear wit disposed them to do his will and praise his purpose. Then he assembled in the Chapel of St Mark 10,000 of his people and bade them hear mass and pray God for counsel concerning the envoys' request, and so did they most willingly." When mass was ended the Doge begged the barons to come before the people and humbly entreat them to agree to the conditions. There was great curiosity to see them, and they were much gazed at. Jeffrey was their orator, who said: "Sirs! the highest and most powerful among the barons of France have sent us before you. They crave that ye may take pity on Jerusalem, which is in bondage to the infidel, and that for God's sake ye be willing to aid therein to avenge the shame of Jesus Christ, for they know no other nation so mighty as yours on the sea, and they command us to fall at your feet and not to rise again till ye have granted their prayer and had pity on the Holy Land over seas." Then the six fell upon their knees with many tears at the feet of the multitude, and the Doge and all his people burst into tears of pity and cried aloud with one voice—"We consent, we consent." "Great was the tumult," adds Jeffrey, "so that the very ground did shake, and when the noise was calmed and that great pity assuaged, the good Doge ascended the pulpit and said: 'Sirs! behold the honour that God hath shown you, in that the best nation in the world has scorned all other nations and chosen your company to effect together a thing of such high import as the deliverance of our Lord.' All the fair words the Doge spoke to them I cannot relate."

S. MARCO—INTERIOR, WITH PULPIT

Enrico Dandolo

Sealed contracts were exchanged with more weeping and genuflexions, the parties to the contract on either side swearing on the bodies of the saints to well and loyally keep their bond. Secretly it was agreed that Babylonia (Old Cairo) should be the objective of the expedition: publicly it was given out that it was bound for beyond the seas. On the Feast of St John, 1202, the Frankish host was to assemble at San Nicolo on the Lido, and the vessels were to be ready. Every detail was specified; the amount of bread and wine per man, and corn per horse, and a court of arbitration was formed to settle any matters of dispute that might arise. But selfish and worldly motives swayed the actions of too many among the warriors of the cross and whole armies were foresworn. A rich and powerful detachment set sail from Bruges after swearing on the gospels to join at Venice, but engaged transports at Marseilles and Genoa. Walter of Brienne,¹ with many another great knight, went off to Apulia to subdue the inheritance of his wife and promised to meet the army at Venice. "But adventures befall as it pleaseth God," and at the trysting-place they were found wanting. Many others, including the Bishop of Autun, broke their oaths.

Great was the consternation of the leaders of the crusade. The Venetians had honourably, indeed generously, done their part and never had such a fleet been beheld by Christian men. But the crusaders were too few to fill it or to meet the payment due.

¹ It was to join the standard of this renowned knight that St Francis, fired by stories of his prowess, set forth in 1204 and saw at Spoleto that vision which determined him to return to Assisi and devote himself to the service of another Lord.

Venice and its Story

The barons spared neither entreaties to their erring companions nor their own possessions and credit. Time went on; the day for meeting their obligations was past and the Venetians demanded payment: 30,000 marks were still wanting, perchance to the secret satisfaction of the Republic, for the Venetians had no keen desire to dislocate their remunerative trade with the East. The Sultan of Egypt was their good friend who had granted them commercial privileges even while the crusaders were gathering at Venice. Two envoys, Marino Dandolo and Domenico Michieli¹ set sail for Egypt, and in May 1202 had concluded a secret treaty between the Republic and the Caliph, by which in return for increased and substantial commercial privileges the Venetians implicitly agreed to divert the fleet from any attack on Egypt.

The Doge was not slow to make the most of the crusaders' hard case. For the fifth time Zara had revolted and was held for the King of Hungary. The Frankish leaders were eating their hearts out at the delay; inaction was demoralising their forces. The Doge offered a compromise. The contract had been broken, and legally the amount paid was forfeited, but if the barons would help the Venetians to subdue Zara on the way, the Armata might sail and payment of the balance of money be deferred. The papal legate, Peter of Capua, indignantly declaimed against the bargain, but the barons were in a cleft stick: they could do no other than accept, and the chance of winning from the spoils of Zara enough to pay the balance of their debt was a potent factor in their decision.

All was now ready; the people were assembled in St Mark's on Sunday, the barons being present, and says Villehardouin ere mult gran feste. "Before

¹ See "The Fall of Constantinople," by Edwin Pears, p. 263. This allegation is, however, much canvassed by authorities.

Enrico Dandolo

Mass began the Doge ascended the pulpit and said: 'Sirs, ye are companions of the best nation in the world for the highest emprise that ever man attempted. I am old and feeble and have need of repose, nor am I whole in body; but I perceive that none can guide nor command you so well as I who am your lord. If ye will grant that I take the sign of the cross and watch over you and direct you, and that my son remain in my stead to guard the land, then will I go to live or die with you and the pilgrims.' When the people heard him they all cried out, 'We beseech you in God's name that ye do even as ye say.' Then great pity melted the hearts of the people of the city and of the pilgrims, and many tears were shed for this valiant man who had so much cause to remain at home, being old, and though his eyes were beautiful he saw not, because he had lost his sight through a wound; but he was of courage exceeding great. He left the pulpit and fell on his knees before the altar, and the cross was sewn on the front of a great silken biretta that it might be seen of all. Then the Venetians began to put on the cross in great numbers, for up to that day few were they who joined."

At length on the octave of the Feast of the Holy Incarnation of Jesus Christ the host took ship and set forth. Never did so great a fleet sail from any port. "Ah! dear God," exclaimed Jeffrey, "how many a good steed was there, and great ships charged with arms and gallant knights and squires and banners so fair." It was indeed a gorgeous and thrilling spectacle. Three chief Venetian galleys, the Peregrina, the Paradiso and the Aquila towered above the rest of the fleet; the vessels were one mass of glittering steel and magnificently coloured banners, that of St Mark, a golden lion on crimson ground, waved proudly in the wind; the air trembled at the blast of trumpets. In swelling chorus the host burst forth into the Veni Creator, and the mighty fleet turned its prows—for Zara.

Venice and its Story

On the way a punitive call was made at Trieste, which agreed to pay tribute to Venice. Another call was made at Omago and an oath of allegiance exacted. Zara was reached on St Martin's Eve, the 10th of November. The stronghold so impressed the Marshal of Champagne that he exclaims: "How shall such a city be taken except God be with us!" On the 18th, after a stubborn fight the city yielded, pillage followed and half the booty went to each ally. The Pope was scandalised. He had tried to tamper with the French: he now demanded the restitution of the pillage of a city that belonged to a Christian king and crusader. The barons excused themselves as best they might; the Venetians boldly told the papal nuncio that the Holy See had no concern with the affairs of the Republic.

The season was now far advanced, and the fleet wintered at Zara. The chief of the Crusaders, Boniface, Marquis of Montferrat, who had stayed at Venice, took up his command after the capture. The problem of the fate of the expedition now faced the allies, for already a bloody fray had embittered the feeling between Venetian and Frank. Boniface, too, was tempted by his own ambition—he claimed the kingdom of Salonika, and hoped to subdue it with the help of the Armata.

And events seemed to beckon away from duty. The sickening drama of bloodshed and treachery that stained the palace of the Greek Emperors during the Comnenian dynasty had, in 1185, reached the point when Isaac Angelos Comnenos, having stabbed his kinsman Andronicus (himself a usurper), was enthroned at Constantinople. But a throne whose steps are drenched with blood affords but a slippery foothold. In 1195 Isaac in his turn was dethroned, cast into prison, and his sight destroyed by his brother Alexius Angelos, who unaccountably spared Isaac's son Alexius. He was a bright lad twelve years of age when his father fell, and was forced by his uncle to attend the court and exalt the usurper's state. The young Alexius escaped, and after many vicissitudes reached the court of Philip of Swabia, who had married his sister Irene. The fleet was on the point of leaving Zara when the fugitive Alexius arrived to implore the help of Boniface on behalf of himself and his father Isaac. The moment was well chosen and King Philip promised in his nephew's name tempting rewards. Boniface with an eye to Salonika lent a willing ear to his plaint. Dandolo, too, apart from the 100,000 marks to be gained by another year's hire of the fleet, had politic reasons for giving the wronged prince a sympathetic audience: Egypt would be safe from attack, and the Venetians had an old score to settle with the Greeks, for a large part of the indemnity promised by the Emperor Manuel for the wanton spoliation of the Venetians in 1171 was still unpaid. Isaac, first repudiating, then yielding to threats, had promised to pay the 200,000 marks due. When Alexius Angelos seized the throne the account was still unsettled. He, too, was evasive, though ready enough to grant commercial favours. The young Alexius, therefore, was told that the leaders would receive him at Corfù, whither the fleet was bound.

Enrico Dandolo

But what of the unhappy infidel-ridden land over the sea? Many of the more conscientious knights, mindful of their high purpose and of the holy zeal with which they had set forth, loudly demanded to be led to Syria. The Pope, who had just received news of the most wretched state of the Christians in Palestine, wrote warning the crusaders that they had taken the cross not to avenge the wrongs of princes but of God: he refused his benediction, and menaced them with the curses of heaven. But it was of no avail, present gain was more potent than a far call to duty. At an opportune moment the young Alexius arrived; the chivalrous natures of the crusaders were wrought upon and the recalcitrant knights were swept away in a wave of enthusiasm for the wronged prince's cause.

Venice and its Story

After much negotiation the start was made from Corfù on the eve of Pentecost 1203. "There were all the transports and galleys of the host and many a merchant ship. The day was fair and clear; the wind gentle and mild; the sails were set to the breeze. And Jeffrey de Villehardouin doth truly witness, who never lied in one word to his knowledge, and who was present at every Council, that never was so fair a sight. And verily it seemed that the fleet must subdue the land, for so far as the eye could reach nought could be seen save the sails of ships and of vessels, so that men's hearts did much rejoice." Once again the avenging host set forth, and not against Saracen or Turk but against the capital of Eastern Christendom.

To follow the incidents of the capture and re-capture of Constantinople would take us too far. Venetian and Frank fought with desperate courage. Dandolo by his local knowledge (for he had already been ambassador there), by his iron will, his ready wit and dauntless spirit became leader. It was a stupendous venture. The apparently impregnable city of a million souls¹ was girt by a double rampart of walls and towers, and a moat wide and deep: the attacking force could have barely exceeded 20,000 men. After the boom had been forced the Franks encamped opposite the land walls on the north and the Venetians drew up their ships along the Golden Horn. A combined assault from land and harbour was made.

¹ Villehardouin estimated the number of inhabitants to be ten times as many as those of Paris.

Enrico Dandolo

Dandolo was the hero of the siege. At a critical moment the brave old sea-dog was seen erect in his armour on the prow of his galley, the gonfalon of St Mark unfurled before him. His men had wavered; with entreaties and threats he urged them on; the galley was driven ashore and the old fellow¹ leapt on to the beach, the gonfalon being borne before him. From shame and humiliation the Venetians followed and twenty towers soon fell into their hands. Meantime news came that the French were in danger. Alexius Angelos at the head of sixty squadrons was about to fall upon them. Dandolo, with characteristic chivalry, let the prize fall from his grasp and hastened to relieve his allies. The very rumour of his coming was enough to scare the craven heart of the Greek prince. He returned within the walls, and having gathered a great treasure of gold and jewels, sought safety and won disgrace by flight. Isaac was led from a dungeon to a throne; his wife recalled to his side; his son restored to him. But his joy was tempered by a hard and one-sided bargain. Fulfilment of the promise made by Philip in the name of young Alexius at Zara was demanded by the allies.

Twenty thousand marks were to be paid to the Venetians; the Greek Church was to recant her heresy and submit to Rome; 10,000 men were to be raised for the Holy Land. Young Alexius as he entered the city in triumph, by his bearing and presence won the hearts of the people. But the bond lay heavily on the restored family; holy vessels and images of the saints were seized and melted; private ¹ The alleged blindness of Dandolo is one of the enigmas of history. The chroniclers are hopelessly at variance. Villehardouin, his constant associate, says he ne voit goutte (couldn't see a bit). Others ignore the blindness, and it is difficult to explain his career on that theory.

Venice and its Story

fortunes were impounded. Yet sacrilege and extortion combined did no more than meet in part the demands of the allies. Disaffection began to show itself, and Young Alexius, fearing lest the departure of the crusaders might leave him at the mercy of his fickle subjects, urged his deliverers to winter at Constantinople, and promised to pay the Venetians for the extended hire of the fleet. The more restive barons, chafing at the delay, were overruled by the authority of the Doge and the young Prince gained his purpose; Boniface was bribed by the promise of 1600 pieces of gold to head him (now joint-Emperor with his father) on a tour of the provinces to test the loyalty of his subjects and attempt the capture of his uncle. But his popularity at the capital, already waning, was quenched by the fanatical license of the Latins, who, in spoiling the Jews, wrought the destruction by fire of a whole quarter of the city. On his return, young Alexius had to choose between his subjects and the hatred of the Latins. He was weak and angered both. The allies sternly demanded the execution of his bond; their envoys with almost incredible daring penetrated to the very throne-room of the palace, passing lines of sullen and angry Greeks eager to leap at their throats. They beheld Isaac enthroned, between his wife and son and surrounded by all the luxury and pomp of an Eastern court. Having delivered their ultimatum in a peremptory voice, they strode proudly from the imperial presence, leaped on their horses, and rode to camp: they were but six, three Venetians and three Franks, who braved the fierce passions of a treacherous populace and the armed retainers of a despotic court. The rage of the Greeks at this insult reacted on the restored family; they rose in revolt and chose Alexius Ducas, dubbed Murzuphles from his black and shaggy eyebrows, for leader. The Venetian fleet was saved from destruction only by the vigilance of a sentry and the address of the sailors.

Enrico Dandolo

Alexius Ducas, the instrument of the popular vengeance, was a Prince of far different calibre from his namesake. His unscrupulous ambition was served by energy, resolution and capacity. He first fawned on the young Alexius, then seized his person and saw him strangled. At once grasping the sceptre, the opportune death of Isaac spared him another crime. He sent an envoy with a plausible story to the French camp and an invitation to the chiefs of the army to dine at the palace, but the sagacity of the Doge saved them from the fate that awaited them had they accepted.

After some parley the second siege of Constantinople was decided upon: a plan of operations and the principles on which the booty was to be shared were arranged. It was a tougher job than before. Murzuphles was a resourceful leader and the Greeks were hot with the passion for revenge. The besiegers determined to concentrate their united forces in an attack on the harbour walls, and from the whole line of battle, upwards of half a league in extent, the assault began on the morning of the 8th of April 1204. Desperate but unsuccessful efforts were made to scale the walls, and stout old Dandolo heartened his Venetians by an oration thus given by Da Canale:—

“Sirs, marvel not that the French have failed to take the city, for though they be brave men and wise they are not used to climb ships’ ladders as you are. Remember what your forefathers did at Tyre, and through Syria and Dalmatia and Romania, where verily no fortress could withstand their onslaught. I know well that ye be of such lineage that no city can be defended against you. And I promise you, by the faith I hold in God, that I will share among you the great treasure within the city; and to the first who shall plant the ensign of Monsignor S. Marco on the walls I will give 1000 perperi ; to the second, 800 ; to the third, 500 ; to the fourth, 300 ; to the fifth, 200 ; and 100 to every one who shall mount the walls. Now, be valiant, that the blood of your forefathers, whose issue ye are, may be proven in you, so that by the help of Jesus Christ and of S. Marco, and by the prowess of your bodies, ye be masters of the city and may enjoy the riches thereof."

Venice and its Story

On the 12th the second assault was made, and after varying fortune, by a happy change of wind, the huge galleys, the Pellegrino and the Paradiso, the flagships of the bishops of Soissons and Troyes, firmly locked together, were brought under one of the principal towers of the city. The ladders just reached the summit. Two whose names are preserved to us, Pietro Alberti of Venice and André d'Artoise of France, were the first to win a foothold ; their fellows swarmed up, and the tower was won. Meanwhile three gates were battered down. Panic seized the Greeks, and the besiegers rushed in. They stood by their arms all night, and in the morning the enormous riches of the city lay before the victors. It was forbidden to slay, but free scope was allowed to rapine. The sack of the town began, and lasted through Holy Week. "Humanity reddens with shame," says Romanin, "and the mind recoils from telling the story of the horrors committed." The Crusaders' lust was unrestrained even by the sanctity of virgin vows. Nothing was spared. Palaces and houses were ransacked ; churches and sanctuaries stripped ; priceless statues were melted down ; pictures torn to shreds. The Latin Christians wrought more havoc in those few days than Hun, Slav or Arab had done in as many centuries. The Venetians, says Romanin, che animo più gentile aveano (who were a more cultured people), exerted themselves to save as many as possible of the wondrous works of art from destruction.

Enrico Dandolo

It had been decided that all the loot should be placed in three churches set apart for that purpose, but large spoils of jewels and smaller objects of value were secreted by individuals. The worth of the French plunder, after deducting the 50,000 marks due to the Venetians, amounted to the magnificent sum of 400,000 marks. All over Western Europe the monasteries and churches were enriched by reliquaries and precious stones, some of them finding their way as far as Norfolk. The plunder of the city, says Jeffrey, exceeded all that has been witnessed since the creation of the world. The four famous bronze horses, attributed to Lysippus, that now adorn St Mark's formed part of the Venetian spoil. It is related that a hind foot of one of the horses was broken during the transit, and Morosini, the owner of the galley that was freighted with them, begged permission to retain the foot as a memorial. The Senate agreed, and had another foot cast and fitted to the horse. "And," says Sanudo, "I have seen the said foot at the front of Morosini's house in S. Agostino, whence it was afterwards removed to the corner of a house in the SS. Apostoli." The traveller who sails to-day up the Golden Horn will look in vain for any vestige of the old walls which the Venetians stormed; but if he will land from his caique a little above the inner bridge and proceed on foot to the north along the street nearest the shore, he will come upon the mighty walls and towers in picturesque ruin and decay, houses nestling against them, wild flowers and fig-trees growing from their crevices. The walls, which still bear traces of their former proximity to the water, have now, by the gradual silting up of the Golden Horn, a considerable foreshore on which a new street has arisen, completely blocking the view from the water.

Venice and its Story

Two master passions dominated the Venetians—to possess living commerce; and dead saints. As a centre of hagiolatry, Venice now became second to Rome. She acquired the bodies of St Simeon the Apostle and of St Lucy, part of the wood of the Holy Cross, some of the Holy Blood, part of the body of St John the Baptist, the arm of St George the Martyr, and the famous image of the Virgin, which still remains the object of Venetian devotion in St Mark's.

The political results were incalculable, for the chief bulwark of the Cross against the growing power of the Crescent was shattered. Six electors were appointed by each of the allies to choose an Emperor. Dandolo by his commanding genius was the obvious choice, but he refused the proffered honour and threw his weight on the side of Baldwin, Count of Flanders, who became the first Latin Emperor of the East. Of the territorial spoils St Mark took indeed the Lion's share. One-fourth formed the Emperor's domain; another fourth was shared among the Frankish lords, Boniface's reward being the sovereignty of Crete and of Salonika. To Venice went one-half—a rich possession, including the Morea, the Ionian islands, the Archipelago, a large slice of Thessaly, Adrianople, Trajanople, Durazzo and other cities, the province of Servia and the coasts of the Hellespont. But the Lion of St Mark had a greedy maw. Like the Lupa in the "Inferno," after a meal he was hungrier than before. Crete, the largest and most fertile of Mediterranean islands, was a trading centre of tempting value and covetous eyes were set upon it. Boniface was approached, and for a sum of 10,000 marks the island was transferred to Venice which at one bound rose to be the dominant power in the Levant. To the title of Doge of Venice, Croatia and Dalmatia was now added that of Despot and Lord of one-fourth and one-half of the Romanian Empire; a Venetian—Tomaso Morosini—was appointed to the Patriarchate of Constantinople, and the Chapter filled with his nominees.

Enrico Dandolo

But to carve out territory on a map is one thing: effective possession another. Adrianople was recalcitrant. In April 1205, while the united forces of Baldwin and Dandolo were attempting to subdue it, the King of Bulgaria, once spurned by the haughty Latins, appeared with a powerful army to raise the siege. The Latins, attacking with their usual impetuosity, were snared by the enemy's light cavalry; the Emperor and many knights taken prisoners; the main body put to flight. Jeffrey gives a graphic picture of the disaster. The old Doge, infirm but unbroken in spirit, advised a retreat to Constantinople and led the van. The retreat was successfully accomplished but the Latins were in evil plight; their Emperor was a prisoner; Boniface slain; the whole country swarming with the Bulgarian light horse; an Armenian reinforcement wiped out. And now the great Doge, their chief counsellor and leader, worn by disease and privation, died: his long span of life was but two years short of a century. He was buried in June 1205, with due pomp and honours, at St Sophia in a private chapel belonging to the Venetians, "for even the church was divided."

The magnificent tomb erected to perpetuate Dandolo's memory was destroyed by Mahomet II. and the old hero's breastplate, helmet, spurs and sword were afterwards given to Gentile Bellini, who brought them back to Venice on his return from the Turkish court. To this day the position of the monument may be clearly seen in the south gallery of the great mosque of S. Sofia, where the marble pavement bears traces of the base, and of the fractures left when the railing which surrounded the tomb was torn away. A marble slab with the simple inscription Henricus Dandolo has been inserted in the pavement, when, or by whom, none knows. His best epitaph is the simple phrase of Jeffrey, mult ere sages et proz (he was very wise and brave).

Venice and its Story

It was on the 20th of July that a post galley brought the sad news to Venice that her greatest Doge lay dead: Pietro Ziani, a wealthy noble, experienced in Venetian statecraft, was chosen in his stead. The Republic had now in fact become an empire. From the mother city along the Gulf of Trieste over Dalmatia, Croatia, the Morea, the islands of Corfù, Crete and the Archipelago, from Greece to Constantinople, even up to Syria, the standard of St Mark was planted. Most of the islands were granted in fief to such of the leading Venetian nobles who engaged to secure and maintain effective possession. Crete was made a great feudal colony. Many vassals of the Greek Empire swore allegiance to their new masters and promised tribute. But the cost of empire was soon felt. A new loan was raised. A fleet of forty-three galleys and thirty ships was placed under the command of Premarino and of Dandolo's son Renier, for the seas were swarming with Genoese pirates and a heavy task remained to consolidate and occupy the new possessions. The fleet sailed eastwards and in its way captured the Genoese corsair Liovecchio, an old enemy of the Republic, and twelve galleys; another, Arrigo Bellapolo, with five galleys, met the same fate. The Venetians swept the seas. Da Canale describes them as swooping down like hawks on their quarry. They reached Corfù, hanged Liovecchio and planted a garrison there. Crete, ever a stubborn and rebellious vassal, gave more trouble. Renier Dandolo was slain, and many a stout Venetian bit the dust or died a sailor's death ere the dominion of Venice was made good.

The Latins meanwhile had recovered themselves at

Enrico Dandolo

Constantinople, but their empire was a shadow; the real masters were the Venetian governor and his ubiquitous officials. Baldwin I. did not long survive his captivity. The story of Joseph and Potiphar's wife was enacted in his person and that of the Bulgarian queen. He met a horrible death at the hands of the abused king, and his successor and brother, Henry of Flanders, held unquiet possession of the Empire for ten years, continually fighting against stubborn vassals. Henry's sister, Yolande, and her consort, Peter of Courtenay, next sat on the unstable throne; their son, Robert, a feeble prince, succeeded. His incapacity and the anarchic state of the Empire, raised the most vital problem that ever Venetian statesmen were called to face, for events seemed inevitably tending to one solution—that they who were masters in fact of the new Latin Empire should proclaim themselves so in name. Doge Ziani called a meeting of the Great Council and put forward a proposition, fraught with tremendous issues, that the seat of the Government should be transferred from Venice to Constantinople. The orations made by Ziani for and by the venerable Angelo Faliero against the revolutionary motion are given at great length by the chroniclers. A curious passage in the speech attributed to Faliero recalls Macaulay's famous New Zealander: "A few years hence perchance," cried the old statesman, "some Venetian traveller calling at these islands will find our canals choked, our dykes levelled, and our dwellings razed. He will see a few pilgrims wandering amid the ruins of our rich monasteries; a scanty and fever-stricken population; and a foreign ruler will be sitting in this very hall dictating laws to what was once Venice." When the motion was put to the vote the ballots for and against were found to be equal, and a casting vote decided the fate of Venice. It was known afterwards as the vote of Providence.

CHAPTER V

Peace and War—The Holy Inquisition —Conflict with the Genoese— Loss of Constantinople

“Who hath taken this counsel against . . . the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth.”—Isaiah.

THE Easter of 1214, falling in a year of general peace and prosperity in Italy, was celebrated by many great festivals. The Trevisans determined to surpass their neighbours, and sent invitations to the whole surrounding country, especially to the Venetians. Never was so magnificent a spectacle: the procession of the Trade Guilds was witnessed by a great multitude, among whom were 2600 noble gentlemen and 3600 gentlewomen with a numerous train of squires and pages and ladies-in-waiting. The principal feature was a Castle of Love erected in the Piazza of the city, with portcullis and turrets complete, decorated inside and out with precious tapestry and other sumptuous ornaments, wherein were placed the fairest and most graceful dames and damsels richly clothed with silk and resplendent with jewels.

It was ordained that they should be striven for per amore by three companies of noble youths. On the one part the Trevisans essayed to effect a surrender to them by calling, “Madama Beatrice, Madama Fiordelice! ora pro nobis!” On the other part the Paduans exhorted the ladies to yield to them, and shot into the

Peace and War

Castle sweets, pasties, tarts and roast chicken that they might eat and be well disposed. But, if we may believe Sanudo, the Venetians, with a profounder insight into feminine psychology, cast in, with nutmegs, ginger, cinnamon and sweet-smelling spices, some ducats and other coins. The fair garrison, seeing the gentilezza of the Venetian youths at once capitulated.

Whereupon was great rejoicing and the standard of St Mark was run up on the Castle ramparts. This proved too much for the Paduans; they waxed wroth and tore down the Venetian standard and trampled it in the dust: an undignified scuffle ensued and the celebration of peace ended in open war. The Paduans aided by the Trevisans, wasted Venetian territory, advancing near to Chioggia and threatening the fortress of Bebbe, but by the prompt action of the Podestà of Chioggia, who called out the militia without waiting for orders, the garrison was relieved and the Paduans routed; four hundred prisoners were made, among whom were two hundred nobles, and taken to Venice. The Paduan prisoners were humiliated—it is said by offering ten of them to any Venetian who brought a white hen—and afterwards released without ransom through the mediation of the Patriarch of Aquileia. The Chioggians were relieved of a tribute of twenty couples of hens due to the Doge, and their Podestà was richly rewarded.

For twenty-five years save one, Ziani presided¹ over the destinies of the Republic. Her commercial

¹ A curious order in Council was made by Doge Ziani in 1224 to attach the property of Agnes of Marseilles who had promised to bring her daughter to Venice and give her in marriage, with a dowry of one hundred livres parisiens and other effects, to Giles son of Raymond of England, it having been proved that Agnes knew her daughter was dead when Raymond made the contract and gave security for his promise. Raymond was awarded damages: 346 Venetian influence was extended. Valuable treaties were concluded with Germany, Hungary, Aleppo, Egypt and Barbary. "In this reign," says Sanudo, "were two most saintly men, Francis of Assisi and Domenic of Spain. Now St Francis returning¹ from beyond the seas came to Venice where he found that many birds were come to sing on the boughs of the trees in the marshes. He, having gone thither with his companion, stood in the midst of the birds reciting the offices and commanded them to be silent; whereupon they kept silence, nor did they depart until he had given them leave. And he stayed in a certain oratory where at present are a church and monastery of the friars called San Francesco del Deserto." The traveller to-day on his way to Torcello will see in the distance on his right hand the island, and the monastery with its picturesque setting of pine and cypress. It is still inhabited by a few brothers and recalls the sweetest, gentlest human soul that ever breathed since Him of Galilee.

Venice and its Story

The choice of Ziani's successor gave rise to a novel incident. The votes of the College were equally divided between Marino Dandolo and Giacomo Tiepolo. For five days they were scrutinised in the vain hope of finding a casting vote. The Senate then authorised an appeal to chance; lots were cast, and fortune declared in favour of Giacomo Tiepolo on the 6th of March 1229. During the interregnum between the resignation of Ziani and the election of his successor opportunity was taken to strengthen still further the power of the aristocracy and to weaken that of the light livres, 32 pounds galangal, 22½ pounds mace, 6 bladders of ginger, 14 pounds cardamums and 4 pieces of damask.

¹ Probably from his attempt to convert the Sultan in 1219-1229. See Sabatier's "Vie de St François," p. 271. The story of the birds is obviously an echo of the Fioretti.

Peace and War

Doge. A Board of Correctors of the Ducal Promissione or Coronation oath, and another of Inquisitors of the dead Doge were formed. The former was composed of five men of great wisdom and experience, whose duty it was to examine and reform the Promissione at the death of each Doge. On the latter board sat three who were charged to listen to the complaints of those who felt aggrieved at any action of the late Doge; to examine his papers for any unpaid debts, and award praise or blame of his conduct, whether as citizen or as head of the state. As a result, the Promissione Ducale exacted from Dandolo and Ziani was made still more stringent in the case of Tiepolo: he was forbidden to communicate with foreign princes or to interfere in ecclesiastical matters, and was made to pay taxes. The Promissione sworn by Tiepolo is given in full by Romanin, and covers nine closely-printed large octavo pages. The details are curious: the number of his cooks was fixed; he swore to receive no gifts nor presents of any kind from any person save and except rosewater, flowers, sweet-smelling herbs and balsam, "which it shall be lawful for us and our agents to receive."

A great work was achieved by Tiepolo in the codification and reform of the statute and navigation laws, the latter being made a model of humane legislation.

Meanwhile anxious eyes were again turned to the East. As the Latin kingdom waned the Republic had increased her power at Constantinople, and in return for naval services the arsenal was ceded to her. On the death of Robert Courtenay the crown descended to his brother, Baldwin II., a lad of ten. But in stirring times a child emperor was impossible, and John of Brienne, titular king of Jerusalem, a heroic old crusader, was during his minority chosen as Emperor.

Venice and its Story

John of Brienne had filled his thankless office but two years when the capital was menaced by the allied forces of the Emperor of Nicea and the King of Bulgaria. It was a critical moment. The Latin army was much reduced by desertion, and it is said Brienne had less than two hundred knights and four hundred footmen to oppose an army of many tens of thousands. But the brave old Emperor—he was eighty years of age—put himself at the head of his little band and sallied forth to meet the host. An impetuous charge scattered them like chaff. The Venetians, too, were not slack. An urgent message had been sent for help, and a fleet of twenty galleys was hastily sent to Constantinople, which swooped down on the Greek fleet at the entrance to the Dardanelles. The whole Armata and transports were destroyed or taken, and the Venetian admirals made triumphant entry into Constantinople to receive the felicitations of the Emperor. Two years later the Greeks were again foiled by the irresistible onslaught of the Venetian and Latin fleets.

At the death of John of Brienne financial ruin was impending and a strange expedient was adopted to raise a loan. Of the sanctuary spoils at the taking of Constantinople, the crown of thorns had been apportioned to the emperor: it was now brought forth with the lance of the passion and mortgaged to the Venetian Bailo of Constantinople, Alberto Morosini, for the loan of 14,000 perperi subscribed by the leading merchants. The bill fell due; the money was not forthcoming and the security was legally forfeited. But a third party was found in the person of a rich Venetian banker, who, towards the end of the year 1237, advanced the sum for a month to give breathing time. If the payment was again deferred the lender might remove the relic to Venice for a period of four months, which being expired the mortgagee was empowered to foreclose. Meanwhile the saintly king, Louis IX. of France, had heard of the transaction and was much scandalised. He sent two Dominicans to Constantinople to redeem the pledge and secure the precious relic for Paris. It was, however, already on its way to Venice when the two black friars reached the capital of the Empire. The good ship that was freighted with the thorns arrived at Venice on the 4th of September 1238. Hastily the envoys retraced their steps and sought an audience of Tiepolo, who straightway led them to St Mark's and showed them the sacred treasure. They then went to the banker and offered the money to redeem the pledge: it was handed to the friars who returned joyfully to Paris. King Louis, barefoot and in his shirt, took part in the solemn procession that accompanied the relic through the streets of Paris, and the Sainte Chapelle, the richest gem of Gothic architecture in North Europe, was built to receive it.

Peace and War

Commercial expansion continued through Tiepolo's reign, and was pursued with the most unscrupulous policy. The attack on Kiev by the Tartars in 1240 is said¹ to have been made at the instigation of Venice, who, by the desolation of the old caravan route from China, secured the monopoly of trade with the Far East. At the same period Venetian speculators began the transport en masse of young kiptchaks to Egypt where they were sold for military purposes. Trieste renewed her fealty and treaties were concluded with Ravenna, Padua and Ragusa; the Sultans of Aleppo and of Egypt confirmed and extended privileges granted to the Venetians, and owing to the skill of their ambassadors Barbary and Armenia were generous in concessions. To the tale of saintly relics were added the bodies of St Marina and of St Paul the first hermit, minus the head.

¹ See Leon Cahun, Introduction à l'Histoire d'Asie, 1890.

Venice and its Story

“In Tiepolo’s time,” says Sanudo, “so I have read, our citizens went as magistrates to all the cities of Italy, for they were righteous men.” They were usually chosen by the free communes of Lombardy, where their capacity and incorruptibility made them eagerly sought for. The Doge’s son, Pietro, ruled at Treviso; a Zeno at Bologna; a Morosini at Faenza; a Dandolo at Conegliano; a Badoer at Padua: the cities of the Lombard League deposited their funds with Venetian bankers.

Rome which had consistently taken the side of the free cities of Italy against the western emperors now found herself sorely pressed in her fierce struggle with Frederic II., and Pope Gregory IX. turned with longing eyes to the one Italian state that could decide the contest. Desire for vengeance and state policy made it easy for Venice to join the league—at a price. Eccelino da Romano, at Frederic’s instigation, had devastated Venetian territory up to Mestre and Murano to punish the Republic for her moral support to the league: it was agreed that the Venetians should fit out a punitive expedition to Sicily, of which half the cost was to be met by the Pope, who promised moreover to cede Bari and Salpi to them and to grant in feud all the territory they might conquer in Apulia and Sicily.

Ferrara, formerly held from the Holy See by Azzo of Este, had become a Ghibelline stronghold and Azzo had been banished. To Venice happily Guelph and Ghibelline were but names; no factions destroyed her domestic peace; no feudal tyrants spoiled her citizens, or fury of popular jealousy flung itself against her nobles. But in Ferrara valuable trading rights granted by the Countess Matilda to Venice and maintained by the Guelphs were ignored by the Ghibellines, and the restoration of these rights was made the price of her alliance with the Papal forces in an attack on Ferrara. The siege was a long one. The city was defended by the Imperialists under the most famous soldier of the day, Taurelli Salinguerra. At a critical moment the Papal legate appealed for help to the Doge, who, impelled by memories of his great predecessor, determined to take command of the forces in person. His son was left to rule in his absence, and after mass in the Church of Santo Spirito the expedition sailed forth, the Bucintoro, with Tiepolo on board, leading. Ferrara was subdued and the Doge was careful before leaving to exact from the restored Azzo the reinstatement of the Venetians in their former advantageous position as traders. Meanwhile the naval expedition had reached Apulia and after devastating many cities, returned to Venice with a rich booty.

Peace and War

Tiepolo is said to have possessed a prodigious memory. "This note I have found," says Sanudo, "solum in one chronicle, yet it was the truth. This Doge was very wise and had great fame through all parts of the world. When any ambassadors came to deliver their suits he held his eyes shut : after he had heard he recited chapter by chapter and answered everything which they had expounded in such manner that all marvelled greatly at so profound a memory, for he was a most wise Doge." On the 20th of May, 1249, Tiepolo, weary of his burden of the state, laid it down to retire to his house in S. Agostino.

The foundation in 1234 of the Dominican Monastery and Church of Santi Giovanni e Paolo (S. Zanipolo) was due, the chroniclers relate, to the piety of the Doge, who saw in a vision the oratory and neighbouring Piazza of San Danieli filled with flowers and white doves bearing on their heads crowns of gold, and two angels came down from heaven and perfumed the place with golden censers. Then a voice was heard saying: "This is the spot I have chosen for my preachers." Thereupon Tiepolo made over certain marshy lands near Santa Maria Formosa to Brother Alberico of the Dominicans, and aided by papal favour and the piety of individuals the building was so far advanced by 1293 that it was ready to accommodate the general chapter of the order. The facade was finished in 1351, and after the lapse of a century the mortal remains of the founder were laid there. His simple tomb wrought with figures of doves and angels, recalling the visions, still exists on the left of the entrance. The great church and monastery of the rival order of friars, S. Maria Gloriosa dei Frari, were also begun in Tiepolo's reign. Until that time the friars of St Francis, says Sanudo, had no monastery in this city and dwelt near S. Lorenzo, where they worked with their hands and lived by their labour and by alms.

At Tiepolo's death the electoral college which had been increased to forty-one, chose Marin Morosini, an experienced magistrate and civil servant, as his successor. Meantime the Inquisitors had met and decided that the late Doge had been too zealous in the advancement of his sons. A new clause was therefore added to the coronation oath forbidding the Doge to ask or cause to be asked any office for any person, or to accept any charge outside Venetian jurisdiction or in Istria.

The short reign of Morosini was marked by one important innovation. The Republic by tradition and policy was eminently tolerant, for it was essential to a great commercial metropolis that men of all nations and of all creeds should freely assemble and carry on their business without fear of ecclesiastical penalties. Venice therefore had consistently refused to admit the tribunal of the Holy Inquisition within her boundaries. In the Promissione Ducale of Morosini, however, an article was inserted by virtue of which the Doge was ordered to name, in agreement with his Council, certain religious men of integrity and wisdom who were to search out heretics, and commit to the flames those who were declared to be such by the Patriarch of Grado or any of the bishops of the Dogado. But before condemnation the consent of the Doge and his Council had first to be obtained. The Republic thus asserted her authority and defended her subjects from arbitrary ecclesiastical domination. This, however, was far from satisfying the papal authorities. The Venetians were repeatedly exhorted to admit the jurisdiction of the Holy Office itself, but nothing further was effected until 1289 when it was decided to accept the Inquisition, but under stringent limitations. Two of the three Inquisitors appointed by the Pope were made subject to the veto of the Doge; three lay representatives, the Savii all' Eresia,¹ over whom the Vatican should have no power to assert direct or indirect power, were to be present at every session of the tribunal with the object of preventing abuses, false accusations, or any exercise of arbitrary power; they had the right to suspend proceedings or stay execution of sentences, and were charged to keep the Government informed of all that transpired at the sessions of the Holy Office. Generally they were to maintain the purity of the faith while safeguarding the rights of the State. No extradition was allowed; the property of condemned heretics² was to descend to their heirs; the funds of the Holy Office were to be under the charge of a Venetian treasurer who was to render his account and be responsible to the civil authorities alone. Morosini's reign was a peaceful and happy one. "So long as he was Doge," says Da Canale, "the Venetians were doubly blest, and with joy and gladness their hearts were filled. Every man, rich or poor, increased his substance, for Messer Marino Morosini was right gracious and none durst assail him in war. His ships went beyond the seas to all places without guard of galleys: he had peace with all: the sea in his time was void of robbers."

The Holy Inquisition

¹ Experts in heresy.

² According to the archives of the Holy Office only six cases are found of the death penalty, drowning or strangling (never burning), being inflicted for heresy in Venice.

Venice and its Story

The advent of Renier Zeno in 1253 to the Ducal throne was marked by a further suppression of popular rights. It was decreed that before publication of the new Doge's name by the electoral college of the forty-one, the people should swear to accept their choice. The blow was accompanied by an application of Napoleon's favourite device—amuse the people with toys: a magnificent tournament and gorgeous processions celebrated the new Doge's election and enthronement. Zeno was a tried administrator and soldier who had commanded as podestà the Bolognese forces at the siege of Ferrara. Nor did his military genius rust for lack of use, for in his troublous reign of sixteen years began the long and exhausting struggle with Genoa for naval supremacy and commercial monopoly.

At St Jean d'Acre was a church dedicated to St Sabbas, and there the Genoese and Venetians were wont to worship in common—each, however, claiming exclusive ownership in the building. A dispute as to an alleged Venetian corsair captured by the Genoese ended in a riot, during which the Genoese raided the Venetian ships, sacked their quarter of the city, and burnt the church. After vain and perhaps insincere attempts at pacification Venice determined to wreak vengeance on her rival, and in 1256 Lorenzo Tiepolo was despatched with a fleet to Acre. He spoiled and burned the Genoese vessels in harbour, landed and destroyed part of their settlement, and after some fighting captured their stronghold, the castle of Mongioia. They sued for a truce, which was granted for two months. As trophies and palpable sign of his success, Tiepolo sent to Venice the short column of porphyry which now stands at the south-west angle of St Mark's known as the Pietra di Bando (proclamation stone), because there were promulgated the laws of the Republic; and the two beautifully decorated, square, marble columns that stand side by side facing the Piazzetta, over against the south side of the church.

Conflict with the Genoese

The truce was a hollow one; each side was eager to try its strength again, and fleets were hastily collected. A desperate battle was fought between Acre and Tyre, in which the Genoese were defeated and their admiral was taken prisoner: meanwhile a second Venetian squadron raided their settlements all over the Levant. Domestic troubles at Genoa prevented for a time further action, but in 1258 a new fleet was fitted out and set sail under Rosso della Turca to retrieve her fortunes. The Venetians, too, had reinforced their admiral, and the hostile squadrons met on Midsummer Day near the scene of Tiepolo's former victory. A day was spent in vain attempts by the Genoese admiral to outmanœuvre his enemy; but on the morrow he was forced to give battle. Before the action Tiepolo delivered a stirring oration to his men, exhorting them to brave deeds. He bade them remember that the honour of Venice, the command and security of the seas, were at stake. A great shout of Viva San Marco protettore del Veneto dominio was raised, and the attack began. It was a long, bloody and stubborn fight. In the end the Venetians were again victorious. Twenty-five galleys and 2600 men were captured and sent to Venice, the prisoners being lodged in St Mark's granaries. The remainder of the Genoese fleet was scattered and Tiepolo's damaged vessels returned to Acre to refit, where the Venetians in the heat of victory stained their country's reputation by a wanton attack on the Genoese quarter, which they sacked and burned. It was a heartrending spectacle to Christian Europe: another act in that pitiful and suicidal struggle between the two most powerful maritime states which in the end reduced one to impotence, and left the other too exhausted to stem the advancing tide of Turkish conquest. The Papacy, generally solicitous to compose the differences of Christian states, intervened, and an honourable but temporary peace was made.

Venice and its Story

Three years passed and a fresh storm burst in the East. Under the feeble rule of Baldwin II. the Latin Empire was tottering to its fall. Self-indulgence and corruption had destroyed the character of the Frankish knights, death, desertion and private interest had reduced their numbers. The Emperor, poor futile creature, had employed most of his reign in wandering about Europe from court to court, whining for outside help. The Crown of Thorns had already been pledged, the rich jewels and precious objects alla greca, the beautiful icons of gold and silver, known in Sanudo's time as the jewels of St Mark, had followed, and the emperor's son was now left at Venice, a princely pawn, for a loan advanced by the Cappellos. Meanwhile by the energy and statesmanship of her princes the remnant of the Greek empire at Nicea was being welded into a powerful military state. In 1260, Michael Paleologus, guardian of the heir to the throne, had bid for and won the imperial office. To make his hold secure he aimed at nothing less than the restoration of the Greek Empire at Constantinople. By prudent and virile measures he had collected an army under the command of his favourite general Strategopulus, who, in 1261, was sent with 800 men into Thrace with orders not to attack Constantinople, since a year's truce had been made with the Latins. As he passed through the country near the city Greek volunteers flocked to his standard, and urged him to seize the opportunity of capturing it in collusion with their friends inside. Strategopulus was persuaded. He hid his little army near the Fountain Gate in the landward walls; men from the city joined him; a hole was found in the walls, and at dead of night a score of desperate men entered one by one, killed the sentries and burst open the gates. The army streamed in; their friends joined them, and after a sharp fight in the early dawn with the French knights the city was won. The feeble Baldwin entered a boat and fled down the Golden Horn. The Greek inhabitants, weary of alien domination, welcomed the invaders, and the imperial city that cost the apostasy of a Christian army, two sieges and the flower of Frankish chivalry, was lost in a night. Venice truly had long foreseen the danger, and had kept a great armament in the Bosphorus to watch events. Was she playing for a higher stake and hoping ultimately to pick up the falling Frankish sceptre? Chi sa? What did happen to the amazement and disgust of the Home Government was that the fleet, when the critical moment came, was straggling back from a futile punitive expedition to Daphnusia in the Black Sea, and returned only in time to receive the fugitive Baldwin and the Venetian governor. The crestfallen admirals gazed impotently at the reddening sky, on a multitude of their fellow-countrymen and their allies on the shore stretching forth their hands to implore protection, and heard the cries of the victims, and the exultant shouts of the conquerors in the city. On the 26th of July 1261, Michael Paleologus made a triumphant entry into Constantinople, once more the capital of the Greek Empire, and the pillage was stayed. It was a bitter humiliation to Venice. She knew the Genoese had secretly allied themselves with the new Emperor, and soon learned the price of the alliance. The island of Chios, a Venetian possession, was made over to them for a trading station; the very palace of the Venetian governor was surrendered and later razed, the more precious of its marble decorations being sent as spoil to Genoa. Negropont, a Venetian fief, was with Michael's approval seized and the Venetians were expelled. All the results of more than fifty years' effort and sacrifice were lost in a few hours, and the proud masters of the masters of the Latin Empire found themselves degraded to the level of Pisa in the city they perhaps regarded as their ultimate prize.

Loss of Constantinople

Venice and its Story

CHAPTER VI

The Duel with Genoa—The Closing of the Great Council

“The dire aspect
Of civil wounds ploughed up with neighbours’ swords.”
—Shakespeare.

BUT Venice was yet in the full vigour and buoyancy of lusty manhood, and nerved herself to regain her lost position. Alone among the Italian states she was able to evoke a fervent, whole-hearted patriotism.¹ Rich and poor, patrician and plebeian were stirred, to the amazement of her enemies, fleet after fleet was expedited against the Genoese. Some minor engagements were fought with varying success, and at length the two powers met off Trapani in 1264 for a final battle. The Genoese were superior in numbers, and had the wind in their favour: the Venetians, having intoned the gospel for the day and called for help on Christ and Monsignor S. Marco, began the attack. A fierce struggle ensued on the interlocked vessels, which formed a vast battlefield. The carnage was terrible. At length Venetian courage and Venetian skill inflicted a crushing defeat on the Genoese, who lost the whole of their fleet. The affection of the Greek Emperor for the Genoese was now chilled; he sued for terms, and after much debate, in which the forward party in Venice vainly pushed their policy of founding a new empire, with its centre at Constantinople, a treaty was signed in 1268, by which Venice recovered her commercial standing in the capital, though she chafed under the necessity of tolerating the presence of her rivals at Galata.

¹ Two centuries later St Bernadine of Siena never tired of holding up the example of Venice to the faction-ridden states of Central and N. Italy, assuring his congregations that what impressed him most deeply during his mission to Venice was not the innumerable fleets of ships and galleys and gondolas that ploughed her lagoons, but the civil peace and concord that reigned among her citizens.

Venice and its Story

In 1265 the banner of the Cross was again raised in Venice, this time against an Italian prince, Eccelino da Romano, the black-browed monster of Padua, who for his infamous cruelty was immersed by Dante up to his eyes among the tyrants in the river of boiling blood. A platform was erected in the Piazza, from which the papal legate, the Archbishop of Ravenna, inveighed against the atrocities committed by the severissimo tiranno whom the Pope had excommunicated, declaring that if he were permitted to live longer it would be to the shame of Christendom. The Doge made an oration in support of the crusade, and Venice joined the league against the tyrant. Eventually Padua was stormed and captured, Eccelino's victims released, himself in a later engagement mortally wounded by a bowshot. He fell, asking the name of the place where he was struck. "Sire," replied his attendant, "it is called Cassano." "Bassano, Cassano," the dying lord was heard to mutter, "small difference is there between Bassano and Cassano."¹ He plucked the arrow from the wound, thrust aside a friar who sought to confess him and died impenitent. Never was such joy in Italy, says Da Canale, as when the news came that the tyrant, more cruel than Pharaoh or Herod, was slain. The bells were rung all over Venice in praise of God, ¹ An astrologer had foretold that he should die at Bassano.

S. MARCO : FACADE AND CAMPANILE

Venice and its Story

even as they do on saints' days. In the evening all the towers were illuminated with candles and torches so that it was a great marvel to see.

The same annalist, writing of Venice with all the enthusiasm of an Elizabethan singing the praises of England,¹ gives a vivid picture of his native city as it appeared towards the end of the thirteenth century. "In the year of the Incarnation of our Lord 1267, I, Martin da Canale, toiled and travailed so that I found the ancient story of the Venetians and how they made the fairest, noblest and pleasantest city in the world, filled with all beauty and excellency. And I have set me to translate this story, for the honour of that city men call Vinegia, from Latin into French, for that language hath course throughout the whole world and is more delightful to read and to hear than any other. For I would have all men to know, who may travel thither, how the noble city is built; how filled with all good things and how mighty is the lord of the Venetians, the most noble Doge; how powerful are her nobles; how full of prowess her people, and how all are perfect in the faith of Jesus and to Holy Church obedient; for within that noble Venice neither heretic, nor usurer, nor murderer, nor thief, nor robber dares dwell. And I pray Jesus Christ and His sweet mother, St Mary, and Monsignor St Mark, the Evangelist (in whom after Jesus Christ we have put our trust), that they may grant health and long life to Monsignor the Doge and to the Venetians. From all places come merchants and merchandise, and goods run through that city even as waters do from fountains. Provisions in abundance men find there, and bread and wine and land-fowl and water-fowl, meat, fresh and salt, and great fish from the sea and from the rivers. You shall find within that fair city a multitude of old men and youths, who, for their nobleness, are much praised; merchants, and bankers, and craftsmen, and sailors of all kinds, and ships to carry to all places, and great galleys to the hurt of her enemies. There, too, are fair ladies, youths and maidens adorned most richly."

¹ Martin interrupts his chronicle at the year 1274 to transcribe a hymn to St Mark which he was wont to recite daily, praying precieus Saint Marc Evangeliste to watch over the Venetians and maintain them in peace sans tirer mal corde.

Prosperity

The chronicler describes the Piazza much as we see it in Gentile Bellini's picture (p. 343). "St Mark's is the most beautiful square in the world. Towards the east is the fairest church in the whole world, the Church of Monsignor St Mark, and next is the palace of Monsignor the Doge, great and most marvellously beautiful. Towards the south is the end of the Piazza over the sea, and on the one side of that Piazza (the Piazzetta) is the palace of Monsignor the Doge, and on the other side are palaces to house the commoners, and these hold as far as the Campanile of St Mark, which is so great and high that the like could not be found. And there, next the Campanile, is a hospital which Madonna the Dogressa has built to receive the sick, and men call it the Hospital of St Mark. Next are the palaces of the treasurers, whom the Venetians call the procurators of St Mark, and next to their mansions are the palaces to lodge nobles, and these houses go far along the Piazza up to a church (S. Giminiano). On the other side (N.) are noble buildings for high barons and gentlemen, and these reach as far as the church of St Mark."

The firm hand kept by the aristocracy on civil government was felt during Zeno's reign. The Genoese were too high-spirited to submit to terms while under the shame of defeat and a new naval war was imminent. To meet the cost the corn tax was increased and a bread riot took place on the Piazza. The Doge tried in vain to reason with the mob, and at last was driven to resort to force. Troops were levied; the sedition was crushed; the ringleaders were beheaded between the red columns. But when order was restored the obnoxious tax was quietly withdrawn. The Government was equally severe to aristocratic brawlers. Two of the Dandolo family sided with the people, and Lorenzo Tiepolo, son of Doge Giacomo, headed the Government party. The rival leaders met in the streets and Tiepolo was assaulted. The Dandoli were at once heavily fined and a law was passed forbidding the people to have the escutcheons of any nobles painted on their houses or to wear any of their emblems. Zeno died in 1268, and was honoured with a sumptuous State funeral in S. Zanipolo.

Venice and its Story

Before the election of a successor the most complicated machinery ever devised by the wit of man for the election of a chief magistrate was elaborated by the Venetian aristocracy. The youngest of the Privy Councillors having invoked the divine blessing in St Mark's, issued forth and laid hands on the first boy he met on the Piazza. Meantime the Great Council met and having excluded all members who were under thirty years of age, those that remained were counted. Ballots equal in number to the purged Council were then prepared, into thirty of which was inserted a piece of parchment inscribed with the word "lector." The ballots¹ were placed in a hat; the captured boy was introduced and bidden to draw out the ballots and hand one to each Councillor. The ballots were then opened and the thirty who held the parchments stayed in the chamber; the others left. The thirty reduced themselves to nine by the same process; which nine sat in close conclave until they had chosen forty, each by a majority of at least seven votes. These forty were reduced by lot to twelve, which twelve elected twenty-five, each by a majority of at least nine votes. The twenty-five were again reduced to nine, who chose forty-five, each by at least seven votes. The forty-five reduced themselves to eleven who made the final choice of forty-one by at least nine votes each.

¹ Hollow balls of wax were first used, afterwards the thirty were made of gold and the others of silver.

A Ducal Election

The electoral college of forty-one thus formed, having heard the Mass of the Holy Ghost, met and chose three presidents and two secretaries. Each elector in turn having placed the name of his candidate in an urn the secretaries unfolded the papers and read out the names. The papers were again folded and placed in the urn and one was extracted. If the candidate thus selected were in the room, he was ordered to withdraw, and each elector invited to state his objections to him. The candidate was then called in to refute any charges made against him, and a last vote was taken for or against the candidate. If he obtained twenty-five ballots he was declared Doge. The election was proclaimed, and a deputation led the Doge-elect to the Ducal Palace, and then by the ducal staircase to St Mark's where he ascended the marble pulpit to the left of the choir and showed himself to the people. Having heard mass, he swore fealty to the State and to observe its laws. The Primicerio then solemnly invested him with the ducal mantle and handed him the standard of the Republic. He was then chaired and made the usual tour of the Piazza, distributing largess to the people. Afterwards he ascended the great staircase, where the oldest Councillor placed the ducal cap on his head. A banquet given by the Doge to the electors completed the ceremony.

Such, with slight modifications, was the machinery by which the Doges were elected until the fall of the Republic. The ceremony over, public festivities followed. By Da Canale's vivid description of the rejoicings that attended the election of Lorenzo Tiepolo in 1268 we are able to form some idea of what they were like. "On the day of S. Apollinare was such great joy in Venice that the mouth of man could not tell of it. For the Venetians had remembrance of Messer Jacopo Tiepolo, father of Lorenzo, how noble and debonnair, how famous for good deeds he was, and great were their hopes of Messer Lorenzo." Soon as the good news was known the bells rang a glad peal, and all the people, even the little children, ran to St Mark's shouting, "Messer Lorenzo Tiepolo is made Doge!" After mass and consecration he was given the gonfalon of St Mark all of gold. Having ascended the palace stairs he stood, gonfalon in hand, while the lauds¹ were sung, and again swore fealty to the people and spake wisely to them.

Meanwhile his chaplains went to S. Agostino to fetch the Dogressa, and to her also were praises sung. On the morrow, having made a public reconciliation with the Dandoli, a naval review was held on the Grand Canal in front of the Ducal Palace, led by Pietro Michiel, who with a great fleet of galleys was about to sail overseas. Choirs were aboard who sang the ducal lauds; the waters were alive with boats of all kinds, those of Torcello and Murano adorned with banners and shields distinguishing themselves by their splendour. A grand procession of Guilds next defiled before the Doge. First came the master smiths, two by two, each wearing a garland, accompanied by their trumpeters and other musicians and by their standard-bearers. As they came in front of the Doge they saluted him and wished him long life and victory. He serenely returned a gracious answer, and they went their way shouting, "Viva nostro Signor Messer Lorenzo Tiepolo," to S. Agostino, to salute the Dogaressa. Then followed the furriers, dressed in ermine, calimanco and taffeta; the tanners, richly clothed in rare furs and bearing silver cups and phials filled with wine; the weavers, clad in finest cloth; the tailors, magnificently arrayed in white garments, adorned with vermilion stars and trimmed with furs, "and the great joy they made must be truly told, for they set their gonfalon in front, with trumpets and instruments of music, and gave themselves up to great gladness, singing canzoni and folk-songs; and having in their turn saluted their new lord right well, went their way to Madame the Dogaressa rejoicing exceedingly."

¹ "Christ conquereth; Christ reigneth; Christ ruleth. Salvation, honour, long life and victory to our lord, Lorenzo Tiepolo, by the grace of God renowned Doge of Venice, Dalmatia and Croatia, Dominator of one-fourth and a half of the Empire of Romania. O St Mark, lend him thine aid!"

A Ducal Election

The wool-workers bore olive branches in their hands and garlands of olive on their heads—they, too, were filled with great joy. The silk-weavers, "they that make pellisses right richly," decked their bodies all anew with coats and mantles of fustian. The makers of quilts and doublets, to honour their lord, attired themselves newly with cloaks of white, trimmed with fleur-de-lys, and each cloak had a hood richly dight with pearls set in gold; little children marched in front of them. The makers of cloth of gold were apparelled in cloth of purple and of gold, with crowns of pearls set in gold; the shoemakers and mercers in fine silk and cloth of gold; the cheesemongers and pork butchers in cloth of scarlet and purple and divers colours, wearing garlands of pearls and gold; the fishmongers and poulterers followed, "and know, sirs, that right well should Messer Lorenzo Tiepolo have them that sold fish in remembrance as they passed, for many a fair trout and sturgeon and other great fish had he obtained from them." The glass-makers bore some of the finest of their wares in their group, and the comb-makers a cage full of birds of all kinds, and as they passed, opened the door and set the birds free to delight the Doge. And, "there, sirs, you would have heard great laughter on all sides."

Venice and its Story

But the barber surgeons were they that most distinguished themselves by their ingenuity. They had with them two men on horseback armed cap-à-pie, called knights-errant, who escorted four damsels, most gorgeously apperelled, two on fair steeds and two on foot. On reaching the Doge one of the horsemen dismounted and making obeisance cried: "Sire, we be two knights-errant who rode to seek aventure, and enduring pains and travail have won these fair damsels. Now are we come to your Court, and if there be any knight who is minded to prove his body and win these strange damsels we are ready to defend them." "Sirs," answered the Doge, "ye are welcome, and may the Lord let you rejoice in your conquest, for I will that ye be honoured at my Court." The knight then remounted his steed and all cried, "Long live our lord, Messer Lorenzo Tiepolo," and went their way to repeat the play before the Dogaressa. How many were the Guilds that took part in the procession we know not, for Da Canale stays his narrative to tell of the Genoese wars, after describing the goldsmiths wearing on their caps and cloaks, pearls and gold and silver, sapphires, emeralds, jacinths, amethysts, jaspers and carbuncles and other precious stones. After the procession an exhibition was held in the palace, of all the arts of Venice, in honour of the Dogaressa.

Scarcely had the echoes of the music and shouting in the Piazza died away when the gaunt spectre of famine hovered over Venice. The wheat harvest had failed in Europe, the Crusaders had devastated Africa, and she appealed to her allies on the mainland for help. A strong state ever fighting for its own hand may win the respect born of fear, but sympathy, never; the entreaties of Venice fell on deaf ears. Strenuous efforts were made to collect cargoes of corn from Dalmatia, Greece and even Asia. In the nick of time a small consignment came in from Dalmatia and was immediately distributed with absolute impartiality among the people. When the pressure was relieved, a corn office, consisting of three magistrati delle Biade, was created to control the corn trade and take measures to prevent any future possibility of famine. The bas-relief in the Ducal Palace, now known as the Cobden Madonna (p. 326), commemorates the wise means adopted by these magistrates in a time of scarcity two centuries later.

Famine

The coronation oath sworn by Tiepolo was made even more stringent on the accession of Jacopo Contarini in 1275. The Doge was fast becoming little more than the official mouthpiece of the aristocracy. A clause binding the Doge to keep himself informed of the number of prisoners in the cells at the Ducal Palace and to see that each and every prisoner should be brought to trial within a month of his incarceration, demonstrates how careful the aristocracy were to justify power by wise principles of government. Contarini was an old man of eighty when he accepted office, and after six years retired on an annuity of 1500 lire, the first pension ever granted to a Doge. The steady pursuance of commercial aggrandisement had brought Venice in the previous reign into conflict with Bologna. Duties were levied on all ships trading in the ports between Ravenna and Fiume, and a captain of the Gulf of Adria was appointed to exact them by force of arms. It was only too apparent that Venice aimed at making the whole Adriatic a Venetian sea, and in 1283 the territories of the Republic in Dalmatia were menaced by a formidable coalition of Aquileia, Ancona, and the Count of Goritz.

The Republic replied by laying siege to Trieste. During the armistice granted by Morosini, the Venetian commander, to enable the Patriarch of Aquileia to bury his nephew, fallen in battle, a certain Gerard of the Long Lances was found to have corresponded with the enemy by means of slips of paper attached to his arrows. He confessed under torture and was shot from a mangonel into the enemy's camp, a mangled mass of treachery. The siege was, however, a failure, and Morosini on his return was disgraced and imprisoned. The victorious allies marched on Caorle, captured the podestà and burned his palace: they even singed the very mane of the Lion of St Mark by a descent on Malamocco. The executive, endowed with unlimited powers, made a levy en masse on the whole able-bodied population, another armament was fitted out and at length Trieste fell. The Pope, anxious to buttress the tottering fabric of the Latin dominion in the East, effected a peace, and a huge bonfire in the Piazza made of the surrendered Triestine artillery satisfied Venetian pride, though her attempt to dominate the Adriatic was but partially successful.

The sleepless eyes of Venetian statesmen were now turned southwards. Constance of Swabia, unhappy Manfred's

“bella figlia, genitrice dell' onor di Cicilia e d' Aragona,”¹ by her marriage brought the strong arm of Peter of Aragon to enforce her claims to the throne of the Two Sicilies, which the Pope's darling, Charles of Anjou,

¹ Purgatorio, iii. 115.

DOGE'S PALACE—THE JUDGMENT OF SOLOMON CORNER

H

Venice and its Story

had won by the defeat of Manfred and the destruction of the Ghibelline cause at Benevento. The Republic, still smarting under the commercial condominium of the Genoese at Constantinople, and enticed by the prospect of regaining her former ascendancy, was drawn into an offensive and defensive alliance with the Pope and Charles against the Greeks. But on Easter Eve, in 1282, an insult offered to a noble Sicilian damsel by a French soldier fired the rage of the Sicilians, and before the dawn of Easter Day the blood of the eight thousand French in Palermo had glutted their vengeance. The Sicilian Vespers wrecked Charles's fortunes, and the Republic turned to renew her former understanding with the Greek Emperor. Martin IV., enraged at the defection of his ally, laid Venice under the ban of the Church, but his opportune death soon made reconciliation possible.

Visitors to Venice may have noticed a traditional motto written in brass nails on some of the gondolas that ply for hire which admirably sums up the old popular Venetian idea of government: Pane in Piazza: Giustizia in Palazzo (Bread in the market-place: Justice in the palace). This principle always inspired the rule of the aristocracy. In 1284, during Giovanni Dandolo's reign, a calamitous inundation had plunged the people into misery. To meet their urgent needs a loan was raised on Government security, and ten thousand bushels of wheat were distributed at a nominal price among the people.

In October of the same year the mint issued the first gold ducat of Venice, which for centuries was famous for its purity, fineness and weight throughout the whole commercial world. Orders were given that it was to be similar to and even purer than the golden florin of Florence, which had been coined thirty-two years before. Sanudo remembers to have seen an inscription on marble in the mint, dated 1285, commemorating the first striking of the gold ducat of the Venetians in honour of the Blessed Mark the Evangelist and of all saints, in the reign of the renowned Doge of the Venetians, Giovanni Dandolo. This beautiful zecchino (sequin) was worth about nine shillings and sixpence in English money, and admirably illustrates the dress of the Doges during a period of five hundred and thirteen years. The evolution of the cornio or horn on the ducal bonnet may be clearly traced on the coins issued between the reigns of Francesco Foscari and Leonardo Loredano.

The First Gold Ducat

The sepulchre had hardly received the body of Giovanni Dandolo in 1289 when a formidable demonstration in favour of Giacomo, son of Doge Lorenzo Tiepolo, put the new constitution to a severe test. Giacomo, son and grandson of Doges, was known to have popular leanings, and so threatening was the attitude of the crowd on the Piazza that the Privy Council personally urged him to disclaim any intention of accepting the proffered honour. Tiepolo, preferring his country's peace to the gratification of his own ambition, exhorted the crowd to respect the law, and left for the mainland till the crisis should be past. But the delicate electoral machinery was never for a moment put out of gear. The provisional Government was appointed; through all the tumult the electors calmly rattled their ballots in the Ducal Palace, and to the sullen displeasure of the popular party a prominent aristocrat, Pietro Gradenigo, was proclaimed Doge twenty-three days after the death of his predecessor. For the first time the officer who recited the formula: Quest' è il vostro doge si vi piacerà, turned aside without staying to receive the approbation of the people.

The long reign of Gradenigo (1289-1311) is one of the most important in the annals of Venice. By the fall of Acre in 1291 the doom of the Christian power in the Holy Land was sealed, and Venice, whose interest in the Crusades and in the Latin dominion over Syria was frankly a commercial one, turned the new situation to her own advantage. Her policy was to frustrate her rivals, the Genoese. To the scandal of Christendom a treaty was concluded with the Saracens in 1299, and ere long slaves and materials of war were openly sold by the Venetians in their ports. The Sultan declared in the charter his steadfast will that the Venetians should be protected and honoured beyond all peoples in the world, and entitled to the sole right of a Saracen escort for Christian pilgrims to Jerusalem. The Genoese thus found themselves squeezed out of the coast towns, and Venice in exclusive possession of the Syrian trade.

Venice and its Story

The Pope, anxiously revolving the sad vicissitudes of the Christians in the east, turned to Venice and Genoa, praying them for the love of Christ to combine and save the fair island of Cyprus, still unpolluted by the presence of the infidels. But the lion of St Mark was a fierce yoke-fellow. The more restricted the field of influence became between Venice and Genoa the more bitter grew their jealousy. Two fleets were, however, fitted out in response to the Papal appeal. Their prows had scarcely touched Cyprian waters when a fight took place between some of the allied ships, and to the edification of the Saracen the two greatest maritime powers of Christendom were soon engaged in mutual destruction. Unavailing efforts were made by the Church to heal the strife, and while the Dominican envoys were treating at Venice the feverish activity at the arsenal told too plainly that the time for the peacemaker was not yet come.

Rumours soon reached Venice of an alliance between the Genoese and the Greeks and of the threatened closure of the Dardanelles to her ships. She delayed no longer to strike. All her seamen between sixteen and sixty were enrolled; her patrician houses were called to furnish their part of a new armament, and on October 7th, 1294, the fleet was under sail. The admiral, Marco Besegio, sighted the Genoese fleet under Nicolo Spinolo off Ayas, in Asia Minor. The enemy was inferior in strength, and Besegio, too confident perhaps of victory, was out-manceuvred, defeated with heavy losses, and himself slain. The Genoese, to clinch their victory, despatched a mighty fleet of nigh two hundred sail manned by forty-five thousand men, among whom were the chiefs of their noble houses. Meanwhile Venice, shrewdly calculating that the heavy financial strain involved in the maintenance of so huge an armament would soon wear the enemy out, steadily equipped a new fleet, called out a fresh levy, and concentrated her force on the defence of the lagoons. Before a year was past the Genoese, after spoiling and slaughtering the hapless inhabitants of Canea in Crete, returned to port.

Duel with Genoa

Early in 1295 news came to Venice which stung her to fury. A street row at Constantinople had developed into a general attack by the Genoese on the Venetians. The former were victorious, and after flinging the Venetian Governor out of the windows of the palace, dashing him to pieces, proceeded to an indiscriminate massacre of the inhabitants of the Venetian colony. The Greeks sent envoys to disclaim any responsibility in the outrage, but they were hectorred by the Doge, who demanded an enormous indemnity, which served but to cement their alliance with the Genoese. Late in the spring the Venetian commander, Ruggieri Morosini, with a fleet of forty galleys, forced the Dardanelles, wasted the Genoese suburb of Galata and laid siege to Constantinople:

Venice and its Story

meanwhile another fleet, under Giovanni Soranzo, entered the Black Sea and sacked the Genoese settlement of Caffa. But the elements amply avenged the Genoese, and Soranzo returned to Venice bearing an unheroic story of vessels disabled and men frozen to death by the rigours of an Euxine winter. The year 1297 passed in petty expeditions, and towards the end of the autumn Boniface VIII. essayed to negotiate a peace. The magnanimous Pope (Dante's pet enemy) went so far as to offer, if the Genoese paid one-half, to pay himself the other half of the claims of the Venetians, but the latter rejected all compromise, and Boniface despairing of success, inculcated the pride of Venice, and washed his hands of the whole business. Each power prepared for a final struggle.

Among the wealthy Venetians whose enthusiasm took the form of offering themselves and their ships to the common cause was a certain Marco Polo but recently returned from adventurous journeys in the mysterious lands of the Grand Khan of Tartary, in Persia, China, Japan, and the Indies; and who from his wonderful stories of the million peopled cities and millions of jewels and treasure he had seen in his twenty-five years' wanderings was popularly known as Messer Marco Milione. In August 1298 all was ready and a fleet of ninety-five sail, under the command of Andrea Dandolo, set its course southwards and came upon the Genoese squadron of eighty-five vessels, under Lamba Doria off the island of Curzola. The fleets were about evenly matched, and on September 8th the action began. Doria, by superior seamanship, got the weather gauge and the Venetians, fighting too with the sun in their eyes, were routed. Twelve galleys, whose captains, panic-stricken, had abandoned the fight, alone escaped. With abject mien they told the extent of the disaster. The fine fleet was sunken, captured or burned, the loss in killed appalling, and seven thousand of their countrymen were on their way to Genoese prisons.¹

Marco Polo

Among the captives was Messer Marco Milione himself, who to relieve the tedium of his imprisonment, dictated in halting French to his prison comrade Rustichello the story of his wanderings and adventures. A small court, in which Marco Polo's house stood on a site now covered by the Malibran Theatre, is called to this day the Corte del Milione.

Venice, conscious that her staying power was greater than her rival's, without a moment of panic set about equipping another fleet of a hundred galleys. But Genoa, exhausted by her costly victory, was willing to treat, and in 1299 the Imperial Vicar of Milan effected a peace between the Republics on honourable terms.

HERING

REMAINS OF MARCO POLO'S HOUSE

¹ The details of the victory are inscribed in St Matthew's, the private church of the Doria family, at Genoa. Hapless Dandolo, rather than figure in a Genoese triumph, dashed out his brains against the mast of the ship that bore him away.

Venice and its Story

During the Genoese war the aristocracy had quietly matured plans for fencing off their privileges from any intrusion of the democracy. Two abortive attempts had been made in 1286 and 1296 to restrict membership of the Great Council to members of the aristocracy, but in 1297, Gradenigo, who was a leader of iron will and indomitable purpose, succeeded in achieving the revolution in the Constitution known as the shutting of the Great Council (Serrata del Gran Consiglio). The Quarantia¹ were charged to put to the ballot one by one all who for the past four years had sat in the Great Council: those who received not less than twelve votes were to be members up to Michaelmas, when, after being subjected to a new ballot, they were to serve for a further period of one year. Three electors were to be appointed who should submit further names of non-members of the Great Council for election under the same system of ballot. The three were to sit in the Council until Michaelmas, when they were to be superseded by other three, who should sit for a year. The law could not be repealed save with the consent of five of the six privy councillors, twenty-five of the Quarantia, and two-thirds of the Great Council. Such were the chief provisions of the measure which transformed the aristocracy into an oligarchy and created the Maggior Consiglio.

It will be seen that by the second clause an avenue was left open by which a Venetian, not a member of the favoured class, might enter the aristocratic close, but it was rendered inoperative by the principle which the three laid down for their guidance, that only those whose paternal ancestors had been members of the Great Council between 1172 and 1297 should be eligible for ballot. The effect of the change, while narrowing eligibility, was to increase the number of the Council. In 1296 it consisted of two hundred and ten members. In 1311 they had risen to ten hundred and seventeen; in 1340 to twelve hundred and twelve; in 1490 to fifteen hundred and seventy; and in 1510 to sixteen hundred and seventy-one.

¹ The supreme legal authority.

DOGE'S PALACE : SALA DEL MAGGIOR CONSIGLIO

Venice and its Story

In 1315 it was enacted that a book be kept for the inscription of the names of all persons above eighteen years of age who were privileged to enter the Council. So keen was the ambition to be inscribed that in the year following a fine of thirty lire was imposed on all those whose names were unlawfully entered and who did not remove them within a month. In 1319 Avvogadori, a sort of heraldic officers, were appointed and charged to subject to the severest scrutiny the titles of applicants for inscription, and in order to frustrate any attempt to tamper with the electors it was ordained that as many ballots should be used as there were names inscribed, and that of these, a number equal to the candidates to be elected should be of gold. The names were read out in the order of their entry and a boy extracted a ballot as each man was called: those to whom the gold ballots fell were declared elected. It was further ordained that after the lapse of two years all who had reached the age of twenty-five years and were in possession of the necessary qualifications should ipso facto be entitled to enter the Council. Then the electors' functions were to end, and any descendant of an aristocratic family who fulfilled the conditions required by the law became at that age a member of the Great Council. This was the final and definite Serrata.

Every noble was bound to notify his marriage and the birth of his children at the Avvogaria to be entered in a book, and stringent regulations were from time to time laid down to insure the purity of the family record. Owing to the association of the golden ballots with the right to enter the Council, this book was called the Libro d'Oro, the Golden book. The Council elected all officers of State, imposed taxes, decreed laws, made peace and war, concluded alliances, until owing to its unwieldy growth many of its powers were delegated to the Senate, the Council retaining as its chief function the election of the officers of the Republic. The Senate had been definitely established in 1230 and consisted of sixty members, nominated by four electors of the Great Council, to whom later other sixty were added called the Zonta or addition. The Consiglio Minore (Privy Council) was still composed of six members chosen from the wards of the city. They, with the Doge, presided over the Senate, and with the three chiefs of the Quarantia formed the Serenissima Signoria (Signory). They could act in the absence of the Doge but the Doge could take no action without them. They opened despatches, received petitions, prepared the agenda for the Great Council and the Senate, read the Coronation oath every year to the Doge and if need were admonished him. The Quarantia (Council of forty) was the judicial authority and controlled the Mint, heard complaints from the subject cities and provinces, and gave audience to ambassadors. In the fifteenth century the civil and criminal functions of the Quarantia were separated and two Quarantie established. The Doge, the living embodiment of the Republic, presided over all these assemblies. In 1308 a small giunta of seven Savii (wise men or experts) was formed to deal with Ferrarese affairs and did its work so well that it continued in office. It was subsequently enlarged and subdivided in 1442 into three bodies, one dealing with home affairs, one with mainland affairs, the third with the arsenal. The three united formed the Collegio (Cabinet). By the permanent appointment of the Council of Ten in 1335 was evolved the famous constitution of Venice which for its stability and efficiency became the admiration of every statesman in Europe, and filled with envy the Italian states of the mainland.

Closing of the Great Council

Venice and its Story

DETAIL: PALAZZO ZICHY-ESTERHAZY

CHAPTER VII

The Oligarchy—Commercial supremacy —The Bajamonte Conspiracy— The Council of the Ten—The Prisons

“O thou that art situate at the entry of the sea which art a merchant of the people for many isles, . . . thou hast said: I am of perfect beauty. Thy borders are in the midst of the seas, thy builders have perfected thy beauty. . . . Thy wise men were thy pilots. . . . All the ships of the sea were in thee to occupy thy merchandise. . . . Syria was thy merchant . . . they occupied in thy fairs with emeralds, purple and broidered work, fine linen and coral and agate.”
—Ezekiel.

THE fourteenth century opens the era of the oligarchy. Venice had made peace with the only rival that could challenge her maritime supremacy, and had not yet entangled herself in an aggressive continental policy. The tramp of the advancing Turk was too far away to echo in the lagoons. The wealth of the Indies and of the Far East flowed through her markets. Her merchants laid the known world under contribution. “By way of the Syrian ports and of Alexandria came the cloves, nutmegs, mace and ebony of the Moluccas; the sandal wood of Timor; the costly camphor of Borneo; the benzoin of Sumatra and Java; the aloes wood of Cochin China; the perfume, gum, spices, silks and innumerable curiosities of China, Japan and Siam; the rubies of Pegu; the fine fabrics of Coromandel; the richer stuffs of Bengal; the spikenard of Nepaul and Bhutan; the diamonds of Golconda; the Damascus steel of Nirmul; the pearls, sapphires, topazes and cinnamon of Ceylon; the pepper, ginger and satin wood of Malabar; the lac, agates and sumptuous brocades and jewelry of Cambay; the costus and graven vessels, wrought arms and broidered shawls of Cashmere; the bdellium of Scinde; the musk of Thibet; the galbanum of Khorossan; the assafoetida of Afghanistan; the sagapenum of Persia; ambergris, civet and ivory of Zanzibar; the myrrh, balsam and frankincense of Zeila, Berbera and Shehr.”¹

Venice and its Story

The bare recital of this catalogue has the effect of a poem and fills the imagination with visions of Oriental splendour. Every year six trading fleets averaging about five hundred vessels each, sailed, one for the Black Sea, another for Greece and Constantinople; others for the Syrian ports; for Egypt, Barbary and North Africa; for Flanders and England. These ships were the property of the State, and in due time a public crier announced the number of galleasses ready for the annual voyages. They were farmed out to the highest bidders, who were required to prove their qualifications and the amount of their capital, and to provide on each galleasse accommodation, a suitable mess, and space for a small cargo, for eight young nobles, who thus were trained in naval science and gained experience of commerce. The vessels were constructed on fixed models and convertible at will into men-of-war. Every man aboard, passenger or seaman, bore arms, and was compelled to fight the ship in case of attack. Standardised fittings were obtainable at every Venetian maritime station to replace any that might be lost or damaged by storm or battle. The food and comfort of the seamen were carefully provided for. A cross painted or carved on the side served as a load-line, and Government inspectors checked any attempt to overload. Each ship carried a band of music. In 1476 the Guild of St Nicholas, patron of mariners, was instituted for the succour of merchant seamen: it has formed the basis on which all similar institutions in modern times have been founded.

¹ Birdwood, Report on the old records of the India Office.

Commercial Supremacy

The cargo of a Syrian or Egyptian galleasse was worth about two hundred thousand¹ ducats, and it has been estimated that the Republic in the fifteenth century could dispose of three thousand three hundred ships, thirty-six thousand seamen and sixteen thousand shipwrights. The consuls at every Venetian port were charged to inspect the weights and measures of the traders and to prevent adulteration or fraud. If the consul were found to be venal he was branded on the forehead. At home the same measures were taken to maintain the standard of quality, and in 1550 English woollen goods from the Thames were exposed with the brand of the Senate upon them in the Piazza as evidence of English dishonesty and the decay of English faith. In the fifteenth century, when Turkish pirates infested the seas, navi armate (war-ships) were built to convoy the merchant fleets, and a state navy was thus formed in which slaves or criminals were forced to work the oars. In 1556, sixty out of a gang of Lutherans convicted of heresy, marching through Flanders on their way to the Venetian galleys, were rescued from slavery by the people of Maestricht and their guards stoned. In earlier times, before the navy was differentiated into merchant and wars-ships, Sclavonians were employed for this exhausting labour, and those who manned the galleasses to Flanders and England possessed a burial vault in North Stoneham Church in Southampton.

¹ The value of a ducat is estimated by Col. Yule at about 9s. 6d of English money.

In the event of a naval war a levy was made on all the male inhabitants. Those liable were divided into groups of twelve and lots were drawn to decide who should serve first: the unfit provided substitutes or were fined. Men on service were given free bread rations and were paid five lire a month by the Commune and one lira from each man of the twelve who was not chosen. Romanin estimates that the equipment of a galley in the early thirteenth century was equal to that of a frigate of seventy-four guns in his day (1850). The discipline was perfect. The seamen were said to obey their chiefs as sheep do their shepherd and gambling or swearing was severely punished by flogging.

“When the hour of departure neared, the Commander came on board preceded by trumpeters and followed by his staff. Perfect silence reigned as he began his inspection. Every man was at his post, every oar in its place. All the arms, accoutrements and appointments were carefully examined, and when the trumpeters gave signal for departure the rowers simultaneously plied their oars, or if the wind were fair threw them up and sails¹ were set with marvellous alertness. A general holiday was observed with great pomp and magnificence. The ships were coloured white and vermilion, the sails bright with variegated stripes, the poop was richly gilt, the figure-head of the most beautiful design. The Doge and his Council with dazzling pageantry, senators in scarlet robes, the élite of Venetian ladies, famed for grace and beauty and arrayed in gorgeous dresses, and hundreds of citizens in gay gondolas witnessed the departure.”¹

¹ The tune sung by sailors to-day as they lift the anchor is the same as that sung a thousand years ago by the Venetians as they manned their oars or spread their sails.

Commercial Supremacy

A stirring scene, surpassed alone by that when the clanging of bells from St Mark's tower called the people to view a victorious fleet sailing up the lagoons and the enemy's standards trailing on the waters. Many were the foreign princes and merchants who sought for the honour of citizenship of Venice and the privilege of sailing their ships under the protection of the flag of St Mark.

In Gradenigo's reign we note the first indication of a policy of territorial aggrandisement on the Italian mainland. Little wars had already been waged: with the Paduans in 1142, to prevent the diversion of the course of the Brenta; and with Ferrara in 1240, to maintain trading privileges. In 1308 these were again endangered by a dispute between rival claimants for the lordship of Ferrara; Venice intervened and was brought into conflict with the Pope. His Holiness, as a temporal enemy, fought at a vantage, for to the material bolts of Mars he was able to add the spiritual thunders of the Church. When the Papal warning was received, the Doge addressed the Councillors, stoutly defended his policy and told them that they were not children to be frightened by words. There was an angry scene in the council chamber, and for once the ominous cries, “Guelph and Ghibelline,” were heard within the walls of the palace, but the ducal party maintained their position and the ban was laid on Venice. The Doge, his Councillors and the citizens were excommunicated, their possessions in Ferrara confiscated, every treaty with them was declared void, commercial relations were forbidden, and all the clergy summoned to leave. The Pope's words, however, were winged with terror to the Venetians. News soon came of banks, factories and ships sacked in Italy, France and England, and even in far Asia; their trade, except with the infidel, was paralysed; religious and civic life disintegrated. But the Republic never winced. On the very day that the papal interdict reached Venice instructions were sent to the Venetian podestà at Ferrara to fortify himself in Castel Tebaldo and manfully and potently to uphold the rights and honour of his country. The Venetian garrison, however, weakened by disease, surrendered after a long struggle, and met the fate of the vanquished. The fleet was destroyed, and growing unrest in the State forced the Doge and his party to make terms with the Pope. Ferrara was acknowledged to be a papal fief, and an indemnity paid for the restoration of the trading privileges of the Republic.

¹ Lindsay's “History of Merchant Shipping.”

Venice and its Story

In the year of the Serrata the corpses of Bocconi, a popular leader, and ten of his followers, had dangled between the red columns as a warning to the disaffected, but after the inglorious issue of the war the discontent of the people was intensified, and found a rallying-point in certain ambitious and disgraced nobles of the Quirini, Tiepolo and Badoer¹ families, who were united by a common hatred of the ducal party. Secret meetings were held in Casa Quirini near the Rialto, and Bajamonte, the people's darling, the "Gran Cavaliere," son of Jacopo Tiepolo, was drawn into the conspiracy. It was determined to organise a revolution and assassinate the Doge and his chief supporters. The insurrection was fixed for Sunday, June 14th, 1310, the eve of S. Vito's Day. Down the two main avenues of traffic that debouch from the north on the Piazza, the Calle dei Fabri and the Merceria, two divisions under the leadership of

¹ The name adopted by the Participazii at the end of the ninth century.

The Bajamonte Conspiracy

Marco Quirini, the chief conspirator, and of Bajamonte, were to march and simultaneously attack the palace; meanwhile Badoer was sent to collect sympathisers at Padua. All had been foreseen save the treachery of man and of the elements. In the early dawn, as the revolutionists rushed from Casa Quirini, shouting "Liberty" and "Death to Doge Gradenigo," their faces were lashed by a driving rain, their voices smothered by peals of thunder and the howling of the wind. The movements failed to synchronise, and the Quirini section encountered in the Piazza, not their allies from the Merceria, but a ducal force which scattered them and slew their leader and his son.

Men who will betray the State will betray their fellows. The plot had been divulged by one Marco Donato, and the Doge had met the danger with his wonted courage and alertness. He increased his guards, summoned help from Chioggia, Murano and Torcello, called out the arsenal men, armed his Councillors and their servants. Having disposed of the Quirini, the Doge was able to deal with Bajamonte's division in the Merceria, and during the fighting Bajamonte's standard-bearer met the fate of Abimelech.¹ A woman aimed a stone mortar from an upper window at him: it struck him on the head: bearer, and banner inscribed with the word, "Liberty," fell to the ground. Panic seized the rebels and they fled across the Rialto bridge. Meanwhile the remnant of Quirini's party rallied and made a stand on the Campo S. Lucia, only to be finally crushed by members of the Painters' Guild and of the Guild of Charity. A more serious task remained, to subdue Bajamonte and his followers, who had hewn down the bridge and fortified themselves in some houses on the side of the Rialto. After many negotiations the rebels surrendered. Their lives were spared, but they agreed to banish themselves from Venetian territory. Ill-hap, too, had fallen on Badoer's reinforcements, which were defeated by the Chioggians. Badoer and his chief followers were captured and hanged between the red columns.

¹ "And a certain woman cast a piece of a millstone upon Abimelech's head, and all to brake his skull."—JUDGES ix. 53.

To perpetuate the memory of this narrow escape from a great peril, S. Vito's Day was made a day of public festival and thanksgiving for evermore. To Marco Donato and his descendants was granted membership of the Great Council. The woman, Lucia Rosso, who had cast the fateful mortar, being asked to name her reward, begged permission to fly the standard of St Mark from her window on every feast day, and desired that the procurators of St Mark, to whom the house belonged, would not raise to her or to her successors the annual rental of fifteen ducats. The house, known as the Casa e bottega della grazia del mortar, appears from an old painting in the Correr Museum to have stood on the site of the first house on the left-hand side of the Merceria entering from the Piazza. The mortar was cast from the third floor window. "The banner I have seen raised," says Sanudo, "but now that the new buildings are made it can no longer be seen from the Piazza. The under part of Marco Quirini's house in Rialto was made into shambles, and there they remain to this day" (about 1520).¹ Bajamonte's house in S. Agostino was razed, the site made over to the commune, and a column set up in the Campo S. Agostino with an inscription stating that the "land once Bajamonte's had been confiscated for his wicked treachery and to inspire others with terror,"¹ and certain of the marbles of the house were assigned by the Republic in 1316 for the restoration of the church of S. Vito. For eighteen years Bajamonte lived in exile and never ceased to plot his revenge until he was secretly disposed of by an emissary of the Ten.

¹ The Quirini house, known as Lo Stallone, is to be incorporated in the new Fish Market; the façade will be preserved and restored to its original state.

The Ten

The Consiglio de' Dieci shares with the Comité du Salut publique a sinister notoriety in history. Let us see how far the earlier and more enduring body deserves its reputation. The great plot had showed the urgent need of an executive able to act with rapidity and secrecy. The Council of Ten was appointed to deal with further developments of the plot, but proved so admirable and effective an instrument that it was more than once renewed and finally made permanent in 1335. The Ten were charged "to preserve the liberty and peace of the subjects of the Republic and protect them from the abuses of personal power." They were elected by the Great Council with careful deliberation among the most reputable of the citizens, and no more than one member of any family could serve. A member sat for one year, he was not eligible for re-election, he received no pay, he was obliged to retire if any of his relations were among the accused; it was a capital offence to receive a gift of any nature. His term of service ended, the dread decemvir passed again into private life.

The Ten elected from themselves three chiefs (Capi) who served for one month, during which period they were forbidden to go about the city, to frequent shops or other public places where the nobility were wont to gather. Among other duties, on the first day of their month the Capi were required to send to the Signory a list of the prisoners detained by order of the Ten with suggestions for any reform or improvement in the prisons, and to take measures to expedite the trial of the accused. They were to report to the Council all the arrests made by the previous Capi and to remind the Council of all cases sub judice in the preceding month. The Doge and his six Privy Councillors were present at the sittings, and a legal officer without a vote watched the proceedings to check any abuse of power. Secret denunciations placed in the Bocche del leone, especially if unsigned, were subject to most elaborate procedure before they were acted upon. The accused were usually interrogated in darkness, but if five-sixths of the tribunal agreed, the interrogation might take place in the light. They could call witnesses, and if the minutes of the trial exceeded a hundred and fifty sheets they were read a second time on another day, that the members might refresh their strained powers of attention: the defence was read entire. If the condemnation, after five balloting, did not command more than half the votes of the Council, the accused was set at liberty or the case was retried. When the condemnation had gained an absolute majority it was subject to four re-ballots before being made final and irrevocable. The Ten dealt with: criminal charges against nobles; treachery and conspiracy in the State; espionage; unnatural crimes; secret information likely to be of advantage to the Republic; the regulations of the Greater Scuole or Guilds; the use of secret service money; disobedient State officials; false coiners and debasers of the precious metals used in jewellery; forests and mines; the glass industry at Murano; acts of violence on the water; the use of arms; theatres; masked balls and public morals generally; and, after 1692, the censorship of the printing press. In cases of especial import-

¹The column is now in the garden of an Italian nobleman at Como.

PONTE DI PAGLIA AND NEW PRISON

Venice and its Story

ance they were empowered to co-opt a Zonta (additional members) to aid them in their deliberations.

The tribunal could inflict pecuniary fines; corporal punishment; banishment, with power to compass his death if the prescribed one were found outside bounds; imprisonment for any period, and for life; the galleys; mutilation; death, secretly or publicly. The death sentence was generally carried out by decapitation or hanging from the columns of the palace or between the red columns in the Piazzetta. For the more heinous crimes the guilty were conducted in infamous guise along the Grand Canal, flogged and broken upon the wheel. Secret executions were rarely resorted to, and generally with the object of saving the prestige of the nobility by withdrawing from the public gaze the disgrace of an honoured name.

In 1539 the ever-present dread of Spanish plots fed by the gold of the New World led to the permanent establishment of Il Supremo Terribile Tribunale of the Three State Inquisitors. For among the large body of State officials and members of councils were many patricians who, impoverished by the decline of commerce, were peculiarly open to corruption, and the need was felt of a smaller and more expeditious body than the Ten. Of the Three State Inquisitors two were appointed by the Ten, one by the Doge's Privy Council. The latter sat in the middle clothed in red and was called the rosso; the former sat one on either side clothed in black, and were known as the negri. They served for a year and were eligible for re-election. Service was compulsory under a fine of 500 ducats. Their powers were delegated to them, as emergencies demanded, by the Ten, who reserved the right of revising their judgments, which were also published in the Great Council. If the Three were not unanimous they must refer the case to the Ten.

The Prisons

Carefully indicted rules guarded against the abuse of secret denunciations, and against the venality or the errors of spies. Suspects were arrested at night and examined in secret, torture being used in accordance with the usual legal procedure of the day. Witnesses were also examined in secret by the Secretary or a ducal notary. The triumvirs acted with appalling swiftness¹ and secrecy, and stout of heart was he who did not quail when the officer of the Three touched him on the shoulder with the usual formula, "Their Excellencies would like to see you." During the sixteenth century the Ten and its Committee grew to be the dominant body in the State, until in 1582 the right of calling the Zonta was abolished, and having no longer the power of associating with them members of any and every council and of spending money they reverted to their former position.

The tribunals occasionally abused their powers, committed some crimes, and made errors. The murder of the Carraras was a national sin; the execution of Foscarini a grievous blunder. But they were a popular body, and withstood every attack upon them. They were a bulwark against treachery: they protected the people from the insolence and arbitrariness of nobles: they maintained equality, and were stern censors of morals. Their best defence is the fact that they endured to the fall of the Republic.

Much undeserved obloquy has been cast upon the Ten even by historians of repute when treating of the famous prisons under their charge, the so-called Pozzi and Piombi (wells and leads). Lurid pictures have been drawn of victims tortured in cells hot as furnaces under the leads, and in dungeons beneath the canal, where neither light nor warmth ever penetrated, and where the prisoner saw the instruments of his torture on the wall before him. But in truth the Pozzi were as little underground as the Piombi were (immediately) under the leads. The Ducal Palace had been furnished with prisons from its construction by Angelo Participazio and its restoration by Sebastiano Ziani until the new prison over the Bridge of Sighs, and beyond the rio del Palazzo, was completed in 1606. Except the Torreselle (prisons in the towers), one of which, at the angle of the palace overlooking the Ponte della Paglia, was demolished in 1532 by order of the Ten, the old prisons were situated on the east wing of the palace between the inner court and the rio del Palazzo, and later were extended towards the Molo on the south. They were on the ground floor, which was sub-divided into two storeys of cells. Some of the windows looked on the public courtyard, and at one period the prisoners could talk with passers-by. They were not known as Pozzi before the seventeenth century. After the erection of the new jail on the opposite side of the Rio the so-called Pozzi were used for the more dangerous prisoners, and on the fall of the Republic in 1797 four only were found therein, scoundrels who richly deserved their fate.

¹ The Ten could act promptly too. In 1484, one of the Capi crossing the Piazza saw a priest and two soldiers set upon a man with drawn weapons. He ordered their arrest. The same evening the three were hanged by torchlight between the columns.

The Republic bore a unique reputation for its humane treatment of prisoners. Zanotto,¹ from whose admirable monograph we mainly draw, quotes the testimony of Friar Felice Fabri, who, visiting Venice in the middle of the fifteenth century, was struck by the merciful treatment of the prisoners of the Republic. In 1443 the Great Council appointed an advocate to defend the cause of the poor detained prisoners, and in ¹ I pozzi e i piombi. Venice, 1876.

The Prisons

1553 a second advocate was chosen. In common with the whole of Christian Europe Venice used torture to extract confessions, but she honourably distinguished herself by appointing a surgeon to examine the prisoners and to report if they were able to bear the infliction. This very year (1504) the torture chamber has been disclosed by the demolition of a wall adjoining the Quarantia Criminale in the Ducal Palace, with the Carrucola (pulley) in its original position. In 1564 the Ten ordered an infirmary to be prepared for sick prisoners. The disinfection and cleaning of the cells and the quality and quantity of the food and wine supplied to the incarcerated were carefully inspected.

In 1591 the Senate permitted the Ten to make use of a floor above the Sala de' Capi in order that the detained might be in more comfortable, lighter and better-ventilated cells than those allotted to the condemned. The rooms were known as the Piombi, since they were on the floor next below the roof, which was covered with lead. According to Zanotto, between the ceilings, which were made of a double layer of larch planks, and the roof, was a space of several yards, varying with the slope of the roof. The rooms were small; roughly, about twelve by fourteen feet, and from six feet to eight feet high, and were wainscoted with larch. They were lighted from a corridor, and ventilators were fixed in the doors. The detained dressed as they pleased, were allowed to see visitors, and to walk in the corridor.

Gradenigo died before the papal ban had been removed, and found quiet sepulture at Murano. A distinguished senator, Stefano Giustiniani, was chosen his successor, but renounced the office and retired to the monastery at S. Giorgio. The annalists relate that while the electors sat anxiously pondering the situation thus created, a saintly old man was seen passing the palace on his daily round of charity, followed by his servant carrying a load of bread. It was deemed a happy omen, for the need of an understanding with the Pope was urgent, and Zorzi il Santo would be an excellent mediator. Being entreated, he accepted the charge and filled the ducal chair for ten months, during which period he was able to obtain a relaxation of the interdict, which was finally removed in the next reign.

Venice and its Story

Giorgio the Sainted left a troublesome legacy to his successor, Giovanni Soranza. Zara, aided by Hungarians and Croats, was again recalcitrant, and only subdued after a heavy expenditure of men and treasure. But Soranza's sixteen and a half years of office coincided with a time of great prosperity, and the strain was lightly borne. Venetian trade, aided by diplomacy and enterprise, expanded eastward and westward. The arts of life were developed. Refugees from Lucca founded a silk industry, which became a source of great profit to the Republic. They were governed by their own magistrates, the Provisores Sirici, who were located in the Corte della Seda, near Marco Polo's house. The city was further embellished, and Soranza enjoyed the popularity that comes to a prince ruling in times of plenty. It was in Soranza's reign, August 1321, that Dante came to Venice, an ambassador from Guido Novello da Polenta of Ravenna, to negotiate a peace with the Signory, and returned to die a few days after his arrival at Ravenna of a fever caught on the journey.

CHAPTER VIII

Conquests on the Mainland—Execution of Marin Faliero—The Fall of Genoa

“ Ill-fated chief—

Him, only him, the shield of Jove defends Whose means are fair and spotless as his ends.”

—Wordsworth.

WHEN the Great Council met after Soranza's death in 1328 the oldest member rose, and after uttering praises of the late Doge and lamentations at his death, exhorted all around to be of good heart and to pray God for the election of a wise prince to succeed him. And never had Venice greater need of wisdom in her rulers. Unhappy Italy, “reeling like a pilotless vessel in a mighty tempest,”¹ had seen the last vain attempt of the Emperors to execute their ideal function. The heroic spirit of Henry VII. of Luxemburg, l'alto Arrigo, had already ascended to fill the vacant and crowned seat, which Dante saw awaiting him among the ranks of the blest, and the poet's hopes of a Cæsar firmly seated in the saddle and curbing the wanton and savage beast of faction in Italy were shattered. From the political chaos three great families of despots emerged in North Italy, the Scalas of Verona, the Viscontis of Milan and the Carraras of Padua. In 1329 the lords of Verona under Mastino della Scala held sway over Vicenza, Padua and Treviso, and Mastino, an ambitious prince subtly urged by the deposed Marsilio da Carrara of Padua, determined to tap the wealth of the Republic by levying duties on all Venetian goods passing through his territories. Venice retaliated by cutting off the supply of salt and a tariff war began. But her food supplies soon ran short and an appeal to arms impended. It was a tremendous choice, for the strength of Venice lay in her naval not in her military power. To fight the mainland despots she must employ mercenaries, and successful condottieri were bad servants. Her infallible bulwark, the sea, would be gone, squandered for a vulnerable land frontier and the financial drain of a continental policy.

¹ Dante, “Purgatorio,” vi. 77.

Venice and its Story

Such were the considerations that appealed to the mind of the new Doge Francesco Dandolo. But the time was past when a Doge could dictate the policy of the State. The oligarchy felt that inaction meant national suicide. If the passage for Venetian goods to North and West Europe was blocked it meant ruin to her trade, and war was declared in the chivalrous fashion of the times. To the confines of Padua, envoys were sent, who delivered a protest and in token of defiance, three times cast a stone into the enemy's territory. A levy was made on all males between twenty and sixty years of age, and alliances were concluded with Florence, Milan, Ferrara and Mantua. Mastino, alarmed at the coalition against him, sent Marsilio da Carrara to treat with the Signory. Marsilio was invited, so the story runs, to sit next the Doge at dinner. The "wily old fox" made a sign to the Doge that he wished to speak with him. The Doge let fall his knife. Marsilio bent down to pick it up and as the Doge bent down too, whispered: "What would you give him who gave you Padua?" "We would make him lord of Padua," replied the Doge.

Conquests on the Mainland

Mastino was unable to stand before so powerful a combination. Padua by collusion with the Carraras fell to Venetian arms; Alberto della Scala, Mastino's brother, was led captive to Venice and Marsilio became once more lord of Padua. The provinces of Treviso and Bassano were made over to Venice, who thus came into possession of one of the passes into North Europe and a rich corn land in North Italy. The glorious initiation of this new and vaster policy was celebrated with great rejoicings at Venice and the prophets of evil were silenced. The Republic proved herself a wise and tolerant mistress. Her new subjects were ruled with a paternal regard for their welfare, while local feeling and characteristics were tenderly treated. The device which still remains from Venetian times over the town-hall of Verona, Pro summa fide summus amor, admirably expresses the attitude of the Republic towards her mainland provinces. The citizens of many a State scourged with the scorpions of Italian despots hailed with delight the advent of Venetian rule. Sanudo in his diary describes the entry into Faenza of the Venetian governor on its occupation in 1495. The streets were decorated with tapestry and cloth. For many days the painters had been doing nought but paint San Marco on the doors of the houses. The whole city with great demonstration of joy came forth to receive the new governor, shouting "Marco! Marco!" A quarter of a century later the Venetian ambassador was able to tell Cardinal Wolsey that although the Duke of Milan and the Marquis of Mantua were candidates for the governorship of Verona, the Venetian army as it defiled through the mountains was received by the Veronese with joyful cries of "Marco! Marco!" and the Venetian commissioner installed in the seat of government. St Mark's lion on his column standing in the marketplace of an Italian city was the symbol of a firm, just and enlightened rule.

Venice and its Story

While Bartolomeo Gradenigo was Doge, Venice was visited by an awful tempest. For three days the angry waves surged against the city. On the third night, February 25, 1340, so runs the legend, as the storm increased in violence a poor old fisherman was making fast his boat at the Molo when he was accosted by a stranger who craved to be ferried over to the island of S. Giorgio Maggiore. The fisherman, terrified by the awful storm, would not venture, but being urged and reassured by the stranger, he loosed his boat and they set forth and reached the island. Here a mysterious knight embarked and commanded that they should be rowed to S. Nicolo on the Lido, and on the boatman protesting the danger of going with one oar he was again comforted and promised good pay. Arrived at S. Nicolo, a third stranger, a venerable old man, joined them and demanded to be taken out to sea. Scarcely had they reached the open Adriatic when they beheld a ship filled with devils pressing swiftly forward to wreak destruction on Venice. Soon as the three strangers sighted the vessel they made the sign of the cross: ship and devils vanished: the sea grew calm: Venice was saved. The three strangers were then rowed back whence they departed and revealed themselves as St Mark, St George and St Nicholas. As St Mark stepped ashore he was stayed by the boatman, who demurred to accepting the honour of taking part in the miracle as adequate payment. "Thou art right," answered the saint, "go to the Doge and tell what thou hast seen and ask thy reward, and say this has happened because of the master of a scuola at S. Felice, who had sold his soul to the devil and at last hanged himself." The old man protested: "Even though I tell this, the Doge will not believe me." St Mark then drew a ring from his finger the worth of which was about five ducats, gave it to the fisherman, saying, "Show this to the Doge and bid him keep it in my sanctuary." The saint's bidding was done and the fisherman well rewarded.

Marin Faliero

In 1343 Andrea Dandolo was raised to the Dogeship. The first patrician who had taken a doctor's degree at Padua, he had already served on the Ten, and filled the office of Procurator of St Mark, when at thirty-six years of age he was elected Doge. Plague, earthquake and war scourged the Venetians during the scholar Doge's reign. Zara, tempted by the Hungarians, tried another fall with her Venetian masters. Marin Faliero, a member of one of the most ancient and illustrious families of Venice, who had served as podestà of Padua and of Treviso, was placed in command of a land force: forty galleys set forth under Pietro da Canale to attack by sea. Faliero met the Hungarians forty thousand strong about eight miles from Zara, and won a decisive victory. Meanwhile Canale had forced the harbour, and in a few months the tough old fortress again surrendered. The walls were dismantled, and this time a strong Venetian garrison was left to overawe the Zarentines.

For a century Genoese and Venetians had been rivals in the Crimea for the control of the fur trade with Tartary. In 1346 Marin Faliero was sent to Genoa to complain of certain piratical acts by the Genoese, who retorted by accusing the Signory of bad faith in dealing with the Tartars. But the ravages of the Black Death in 1348, when two-fifths of the people of Venice are said to have perished, and fifty noble families to have become extinct, absorbed for a time the attention of the Republic. In 1349 friction with the Genoese led to a definite breach, and another act in the tragedy of Christendom was begun. Two years of naval warfare passed with little advantage to either power. In 1353, in alliance with Peter of Aragon and the Emperor of Constantinople, the Venetians sailed up the Bosphorus and came upon the enemy under Paganino Doria, off Pera. Two hours before sunset the engagement began and a long and bloody struggle raged through the night, illumined only by the lurid glare of burning ships. The Venetians were defeated, and Nicolo Pisani, their commander, retired to Crete to recruit and await reinforcements. In February 1353 he was able to join the Aragonese fleet in Sardinian waters and attack the Genoese under Antonio Grimaldi off Lojera. The enemy were outmanœuvred, their armament utterly destroyed, and Grimaldi, with a few shattered galleys, reached Genoa crushed and humiliated. Panic seized the city. In the despair engendered by defeat a momentous step was taken. The cowed Genoese surrendered their independence and implored the protection of Giovanni Visconti, Lord Bishop of Milan.

Venice and its Story

Time for recuperation was, however, needed, and Visconti sought peace for his new vassal by sending Petrarch to Venice as his envoy. The poet had already, by an epistle to Dandolo, which reads like an echo of his pathetic canzone All' Italia, besought the rivals to exchange the kiss of peace and not persist in a war which must end in one of the eyes of Italy being quenched, the other dimmed. As well appeal to two eagles fighting for their quarry. After some weeks at Venice, honoured as a poet but unheeded as a messenger of peace, he returned sorrowing to Milan. A year passed, and a new fleet left Genoa under Doria, who cleverly slipped by Pisani, sailed up the Adriatic, devastated Lesena, Curzola and Parenza, and anchored within striking distance of the lagoons. It was now the turn of Venice to feel alarm. The channels were fortified, a new fleet was equipped, a war tax levied. The Doge, prostrated by the news, never recovered, and died of a broken heart on September 7th, 1354. He lies in the Baptistry that he did so much to beautify, and under his noble and simple monument there still remains the Latin epitaph sometimes wrongly ascribed to Petrarch. Andrea Dandolo is remembered as a Venetian historian and an accomplished legist, a lover of the arts, and a great humanist.

Marin Faliero

On October the 4th the Bucintoro was sent to Chioggia to meet Marin Faliero, recalled from the Roman legation to assume the ducal cap. The great State barge set forth, but so dense a fog enveloped Venice that it was deemed prudent to land in small boats. The gondola bearing Faliero failed to make the usual stage by the Ponte della Paglia, and, sinister augury, landed the Doge between the red columns of the Piazzetta. Faliero, however, began his term of office happily by signing a truce with the Genoese. The breathing time was used in concentrating the fleet, and scarcely was the truce ended when Nicolo Pisani, with his son Vettore, sailed for the Ionian Isles in search of Doria. But the Genoese refused to be drawn, and Pisani went into winter quarters at Portolungo in the Morea behind the island of Sapienza. Doria saw an opportunity to trap his enemy. By a brilliant manœuvre he got part of his fleet between the Venetians and the shore, and attacking front and rear routed them with terrible loss, no less than six thousand being made prisoners. Pisani and his lieutenant, Quirini, escaped with the remnant of the armament to be impeached and degraded in Venice. Under the shadow of this disaster Venice displayed her wonted fortitude. With admirable self-control the Signory exhorted all their podestà, consuls and agents to be of good courage, called for men and ships in defence of the fatherland, and despatched eight thousand ducats to Genoa to soften the lot of the captives. Before, however, the spring made further operations possible, a truce was effected by the mediation of the Emperor; and while negotiations were pending for a definite peace, Europe was shocked by the news of the trial and execution of a Doge of Venice. The chroniclers give very circumstantial details of the drama, but to Petrarch, who was on terms of closest intimacy with the Doge, and to other contemporaries the whole business was shrouded in mystery. No record of the trial exists.

Venice and its Story

Faliero was of a proud and fiery temper and while podestà at Treviso is said to have boxed the bishop's ears for having kept him waiting at a religious procession. After the usual bull-fight and festivities in the Piazza on Carnival Thursday in 1355, the Doge gave a sumptuous banquet and dance in the palace. Among the guests was a young noble, Michel Steno, who, heated with wine, misconducted himself and was by the Doge's orders expelled from the hall. Steno, furious with rage, pencilled on the ducal chair, as he passed through Faliero's apartment, an insulting reflection on the Doge's honour: Marin Falier della bella mujer tu la mantien e altri la galde. Steno was accused before the Quarantia and let off with a punishment which the Doge regarded as derisory. On the morrow it befell that a choleric noble, Marco Barbaro, went to demand certain things of the Arsenal authorities, and being refused, struck the Admiral Ghiello with his clenched fist. He was wearing a ring and an ugly wound was left. The Admiral, with bloody face went straight-way to Faliero and prayed to be avenged. "What would you?" said the Doge; "Look at the shameful words written of me, and the way the ribald Steno has been treated." "Messer to dose," answered Ghisello, "if you will make yourself lord of Venice and get all those cuckold nobles cut in pieces I am prepared to help you."

Marin Faliero

The tempter spoke to willing ears. A vast conspiracy was formed to make Faliero despot of Venice. Secret meetings were held in the palace, and it was arranged that sixteen leaders should each prepare an armed force of forty men, who, however, were not to be told for what purpose they were wanted. On Wednesday, April 15th, a rumour was to be spread that the Genoese were in the lagoons, and the alarm-bell of St Mark's was to be rung. The leaders with their men were to converge on the Piazza and cut down the nobles and influential citizens who would hasten to answer the call. Faliero was then to be acclaimed lord of Venice. To incite the people to hatred of the nobles, hired roysterers were sent by night about the city doing violence to and insulting the women of the people, calling each other by well-known names of nobles as they mockingly rioted through the streets. "But the Lord God who hath ever watched over this most glorious city," says Sanudo, "inspired Beltrame Bergamasco, one of the leaders, to go secretly to a beloved patron, Nicolo Lioni, and warn him as he valued his life not to leave his house on the 15th. Lioni's suspicions were aroused; he questioned Beltrame and finally locked him in a room while he went to seek Giovanni Gradenigo, dubbed Nasone (big nose) and Marco Cornaro in order to take counsel together. They returned to Lioni's house and after again questioning Beltrame decided to send messengers with an urgent summons to the Ten and the chief Councillors and officers of the State to a meeting in the sacristy of S. Salvatore. Blanched with terror they hurried together. Up to that time the complicity of the Doge was not known, but the immediate arrest of two other conspirators discovered the full danger of the situation. The Ten were equal to the emergency. The chief police officials and heads of the wards were sent for and asked to take good men and true, and arrest the leading conspirators. Armed forces were summoned from Chioggia; all means of egress from the palace were guarded; the bell-ringer was forbidden to stir.

Venice and its Story

On the dawn of the 16th the Ten summoned a Zonta of twenty of the wisest, best and most ancient of the nobles of Venice to join them in trying the Doge. He made no attempt to defend himself and was sentenced to death. On the 17th, the biretta removed, stripped of his ducal robes and clothed in a black gown, he was led to the spot on the landing of the staircase¹ in the courtyard where seven months before he had sworn to defend the Constitution. At one stroke his head was severed from his body. A capo of the Ten then went to the arcade of the palace over the Piazza and showed the executioner's bloody sword to the assembled people, crying: "The great judgment has been done on the traitor." The gates were opened and the people rushed in to see the body. At night all that remained of Marin Faliero was placed in a boat with eight lighted torches and carried to burial at S. Zanipolo. No record of the sentence is found in the acts of the Ten. On the unfilled space where the minutes should be entered are the words N. Szbatur, "Let it not be written." A year later his portrait was blotted out and the place covered with a black veil with the inscription: Hic est locus Marini Faletro decapitati pro criminibus. Meanwhile the leaders of the plot as they were captured were ¹ Not the present Scala dei Giganti built two centuries later in a different position.

THE PALAZZI GIUSTINANI AND FOSCARI

Venice and its Story

hanged in a row, with iron gags in their mouths, from the columns of the palace. St Isidore's Day, April 16th, was made a public festival and as late as 1520 Sanudo saw carried in procession the white damask cloth bespattered with blood which was used at the execution.

On the 21st the vacant ducal chair was filled by the election of Gradenigo il Nasone, who had been largely instrumental in frustrating the plot. The Genoese negotiations dragged on, and not until the June following was the treaty of peace signed at Milan. But Venetian statesmen had short rest from foreign complications. The defeat of Sapienza and the supposed laming of the executive by the miserable end of Doge Faliero, tempted the Hungarians, who were rapidly increasing in population and civilisation, to achieve their purpose of acquiring possession of a sea-board: war was declared and Francesco Carrara, who held Padua under Venetian tutelage, was called to aid his suzerain. But the Carraras aimed at founding a dynasty and gave secret assistance to King Louis of Hungary, who was besieging Treviso. The defence of Treviso and of Dalmatia was beyond the power of the Republic; after a two years' struggle and bitter hours of humiliation, Dalmatia, bought with so much blood of Doges, patricians and people, was surrendered by the peace of Zara, in February 1358, to the King of Hungary in exchange for the retention of Treviso. Meantime Gradenigo had died (in 1356) and left to Giovanni Delfino the signing of the great renunciation. Delfino was stoutly defending Treviso when elected, and being refused a permit to pass the Hungarian lines broke through by night and met the Senate at Mestre. Broken-hearted, his sight failing, he died of the plague in 1361.

Under Delfino's successor Lorenzo Celsi, Crete,

Petrarch at Venice

never wholly subjugated, burst into revolt and terror reigned in the island. At this time Petrarch, seeking peace and security, had settled in Venice, the "only nest of liberty and sole refuge of the good." He lived simply, at the sign of the Two Towers on the Riva degli Schiavoni, where it was his delight to stand at the window watching the huge galleys, big as the house he lived in, and with masts taller than towers, passing and repassing. The poet, honoured and cherished, was on intimate terms with the Signory and advised the employment of the famous Veronese condottiero Lucchino del Verme to subdue the island. On the 4th of June about the sixth hour the poet was at his window chatting with the Archbishop of Patras when the friends saw a galley gliding swiftly up the lagoons, her masts wreathed with flowers, her deck crowded with men waving flags; hostile banners trailed in the waters behind her. She brought the news that Lucchino, falling upon the insurgents, weakened by divided counsels, had defeated them and punished the leaders. A thanksgiving festival was ordered which lasted three days. "The Doge," writes Petrarch, "with a numerous train took his place to watch the sports over the vestibule of St Mark's where stand the four bronze horses (a work of ancient and excellent art) that seem to challenge comparison with the living and raise their hoofs to tread the ground. An awning of tapestry in many colours kept off the heat of the sun and I myself was invited to sit by the right hand of the Doge." The great Piazza, the church, the Campanile, the roofs, the arcades, the windows, were a mass of people. A magnificent pavilion next the church was filled with more than four hundred gaily dressed ladies. English knights took part in the jousts; but the poet, bored by the length of the festivities, pleaded pressure of business on the second day and came no more. The rejoicings were premature, the revolt soon flamed forth again, and a costly campaign of twelve months was needed to quench it. Petrarch, to show his gratitude to the Venetian State, offered to make over his great collection of books to found a public library if the Republic would house them. The procurators of St Mark accepted the charge, but the ultimate fate of this priceless gift is unknown.

Venice and its Story

During the short and peaceful reign of Marco Corner, Guariento of Verona was employed to paint on the walls of the Hall of the Great Council the story of Alexander III. and Barbarossa, for which Petrarch composed inscriptions.¹ In 1368 a deputation from the Great Council headed by Vettor Pisani went in search of the procurator, Andrea Contarini, who had been chosen Doge, and found him grafting fruit trees on his farm by the Brenta. Contarini had been warned against accepting the Dogeship by a Syrian sooth-sayer, and threats of confiscation were necessary to force him from his retreat. At the peace of Zara, Louis of Hungary had shielded Carrara from Venetian vengeance, but the erection of two forts on the Brenta now gave the Venetians a pretext for paying off old scores. Louis again stood by his ally until the lucky capture of the King's nephew by the Venetians enabled them to exact the abandonment of the war as the price of his ransom, and Carrara was made to pay heavily for disloyalty. Petrarch accompanied the Paduan peace envoys—a grateful task to the poet of peace and concord.² It was his last mission to Venice.

The final act in the struggle with Genoa now draws

¹ Remains of these frescoes were discovered when Tintoretto's Paradiso was removed for restoration in 1903. They are now (1904) being carefully peeled from the wall.

² " I'vo gridando pace, pace, pace! " Canzone all' Italia.

The Fall of Genoa

nigh. A quarrel for precedence took place at the Coronation of the King of Cyprus between the Venetian and Genoese envoys, Malipiero and Paganino Doria, in which the latter, "being full of anger and venom," made use of coarse and unseemly words towards the Venetians. The quarrel was renewed at the banquet that followed, and loaves of bread and other meats were used as missiles. The Cypriotes sided with the Venetians, and many of the Genoese present were flung out of the window and dashed to pieces. But it was a dispute for the possession of the classic Tenedos notissima fame insula which made war inevitable. The Signory offered the Greek Emperor for the cession of the island (which by its position south of the Dardanelles was of great strategical importance) the sum of three thousand ducats and the return of the Imperial jewels which were held in pledge at Venice. The offer was made a demand by a threat to treat with the Turks if the Emperor refused the bargain: Paleologus had emptied his treasury to meet the cost of the Ottoman wars, and accepted the offer. The Genoese retaliated by taking in hand Andronicus, the Emperor's rebellious and renegade son, who in return for their support promised to make them masters of the island. The islanders confronted by the rival claims, came forth bearing crosses in their hands to welcome the Venetians, and the Governor declared for St Mark: a Venetian garrison was accepted and an attempted landing by the Genoese defeated with great slaughter.

Each of the powers prepared for the struggle: Genoa by allying herself with the King of Hungary and the Carraras of Padua; Venice with Barnabo Visconti, lord of Milan, for the Milanese patronate of Genoa was of brief duration. Carlo Zeno, whose varied career and charmed life form one of the romances of history, was sent to harass the Genoese in the Mediterranean, and Vettor Pisani given command of the home fleet. After some minor successes Pisani was ordered by the Senate to go into winter quarters at Pola. While resting his exhausted crews and refitting his ships, the enemy appeared in the offing. Pisani, whose better judgment was overruled by the civil Commissioners, was compelled to give battle. Stung by a reflection on his courage he grasped a banner and led the onslaught, crying, "Who loves Messer S. Marco, let him follow me." Luciano Doria the Genoese admiral was slain, and victory inclined at first to the Venetians, but a clever feint broke their formation. The Genoese turned, and the whole Venetian fleet, save six galleys that escaped to Parenzo, was annihilated. Pisani on his arrival at Venice was accused of defective scouting, impeached, and punished by degradation and imprisonment.

Venice and its Story

Venice reeled under the blow. Zeno was far away. The enemy was reinforced by Pietro Doria's command, and for the first time during many centuries a hostile fleet swept down on the lagoons. But Venice never lost faith in herself or in her destiny. With grim determination she set her teeth and tightened her armour. The approved measures were taken to fortify the city and block the channels; messengers were dispatched to recall Carlo Zeno, and a Franciscan friar was sent to learn the price of the King of Hungary's neutrality. But the Genoese and Paduan envoys at Buda were already singing the dirge of Venetian independence: a garrison was to be planted at St Mark's; a castle built at Cannareggio; her inviolable bulwark the sea was to be breached and indomitable Venice chained by a causeway to the mainland. The attempt to detach the King from his ally failed, and the miserable remnant of the fine fleet was entrusted to Taddeo Giustiniani, who to hearten his men decided to attack some Genoese galleys that were hovering off Lido. As he sailed forth, a prisoner leapt from one of the enemy's ships and swam towards the Venetian fleet. A Genoese bowman took aim and shot him in the head, but the heroic Venetian pressed on, and when picked up warned his compatriots that the whole Genoese fleet under Pietro Doria was following: Giustiniani turned back, and his little armament was saved.

The Fall of Genoa

Doria had sailed into the gulph, burning Umago, Grado and Caorle; he then turned towards the lidi, devastated Pelestrina, captured and utterly destroyed Chioggia minore, and prepared to attack Chioggia maggiore. On the mainland, the Hungarians had occupied important Venetian possessions; Treviso was besieged; Carrara, by strenuous engineering, had joined hands with his ally, and given Genoa a base on the mainland. On the 16th of August a general assault was made on Chioggia. The garrison fought bravely: Emo, their commander, with a handful of men resisted to the last. But he, too, was at length overpowered, and the banners of Genoa, Hungary and Padua floated over Chioggia. It was about midnight when the calamitous news reached St Mark's. The great bell was tolled, and under the gloom of the disaster it was decided to open negotiations with the enemy. But the offer of the Signory was haughtily rejected. "Ye shall have no peace," answered Doria, "until I have bridled S. Mark's horses."

Venice now prepared for a death-grapple with her adversary. The common peril evoked a noble enthusiasm. Patrician offered to share the last crust with plebeian and fight shoulder to shoulder in defence of the fatherland. After an unsuccessful attempt to secure the services of Sir John Hawkwood, prince of condottieri, as Captain-General, the post was given to Taddeo Giustiniani; but the people, with finer insight, shouted for Vettor Pisani, under him alone would they fight. The Senate gave way. A great multitude welcomed his release from prison, and bore him in triumph to St Mark's, crying, Viva Messer Vettor Pisani"; their hero rebuked them, and bade them keep silence or shout, Viva Messer S. Marco." They only cried the more loudly, "Long live Vettor Pisani and St Mark! Long live Vettor Pisani our father." As he was borne along, his veteran pilot, Corbaro, shouted, "Now is the time to avenge thee, make thyself dictator": the answer was a blow from Pisano's clenched fist. From St Mark's to his house in S. Fantino, so great was the press of people that there was no place on the ground for a grain of millet seed. He reached home to find that his brother was dead, that his father, too, had gone to an obscure grave.

Venice and its Story

On the morrow Pisani repaired to St Mark's to pray for divine aid, and after his devotions, stood by the high altar and made a bellissima sermone in the vulgar tongue to the people. With cries of "Galleys! galleys! arms! arms!" they streamed out to the Piazza. So great, however, was the disappointment when it became known that Pisani was to share the command with Giustiniani that the seamen refused to serve, and the Senate again gave way. The people's leader being assured them, enthusiasm knew no bounds. Everyone able to bear arms enrolled himself. A forced loan produced the magnificent sum of more than six and a quarter millions of lire. Gold and silver, jewels and precious stones were cast into the treasury; citizens stripped themselves even of the clasps of their garments. The Signory decreed the ennoblement after the peace of thirty families who should have contributed most in men and treasure to the State. Foreigners were offered citizenship. The Doge himself, seventy-two years and all, reared his gonfalon of gold in the Piazza and decided to lead the armament. A new fleet was equipped: the fortifications strengthened.

The Fall of Genoa

Meanwhile Doria had planned to winter in Chioggia. and Pisani with daring and masterly resource determined to take the offensive and imprison the Genoese in the harbour. On the night of December the 21st, the Venetian fleet left its moorings, towing behind it great hulks filled with stones. Before dawn it had reached the channel of Chioggia. Five thousand men were disembarked on the tongue of land at Brondolo: they were soon attacked and forced by the Genoese to regain their ships. But the diversion had enabled Pisani to sink two of his hulks across the passage, and soon an insuperable barrier blocked the issue. Swiftly he turned under the very jaws of the Genoese cannon and succeeded in holding the enemy while his sappers dammed the channel of Brondolo; with equal skill and bravery the canal of Lombardy was choked, and Carrara cut off from his ally. In a few days every issue from Chioggia was barred, and Pisani hastened out to sea by the Porto di Lido to deal with any reinforcements that might be sent to raise the blockade.

Slowly the dark, cold December days dragged on: strenuous fighting, privation and hunger broke down the spirits of the Venetians, and some there were who murmured, saying, "rather than die here let us abandon Venice and migrate to Crete." But the aged Doge met them, drew his sword and swore that though on the verge of eighty he would die sooner than return defeated to St Mark's. When the end of the year was at hand, a mutiny threatened: Contarini again appealed to them, and promised that if on January 1st Zeno had not been sighted, the blockade of Chioggia should be raised. On the morning of New Year's day anxious eyes scanned the seas. At length a watcher on St Mark's tower raised a cry. Fifteen sail were on the horizon. Was it invincible Zeno bringing salvation to Venice, or Genoese reinforcements bearing her doom? Some light, swift vessels were sent to reconnoitre. As they neared the squadron St Mark's banner was run up on the foremost galley. The darkest hour had passed. For six months after Zeno's arrival the Genoese held out, but there was never any doubt as to the ultimate result, and on June the 24th the Lion of St Mark again waved from the Tower of Chioggia.

Venice and its Story

Two Genoese fleets, were, however, still at large. Pisani was sent to run them down and died of fever and wounds at Manfredonia.¹ Zeno took up the chase, but the Genoese successfully eluded their pursuers. It was the end of Genoa as a great maritime power. Even as Spain did in her struggle with England two centuries later, Genoa had entered on a contest which tried the nation beyond its powers. Hostilities on the mainland continued till, by the mediation of the House of Savoy, a congress met at Turin and a general treaty of peace was signed in August 1381. For three years no merchant ship had left Venice, yet she emerged from the contest stronger than ever, the acknowledged mistress of the seas.

In September 1381 the Great Council met to elect the thirty contributors to the success of the war, who were to be ennobled. The balloting lasted all day and great part of the night, and on the morrow

¹ The hero's statue and a Latin inscription from his tomb in the demolished church of S. Antonio are now in the Museum of the Arsenal.

The Fall of Genoa

the names were cried at the edict stones of the Rialto and St Mark's. Those thus honoured went, each bearing a lighted taper, in solemn procession to St Mark's, and the ceremony ended in popular rejoicings.

CHAPTER IX

Aggression on the Mainland—Arrest and Execution of Carmagnola— The Two Foscari

“Are these thy boasts—

To mix with kings in the low lust of sway,
Yell in the hunt and share the murderous prey.”

—Coleridge.

[IN June of the next year the venerable and faithful Doge Andrea Contarini was laid to rest in the cloister of S. Stefano, and Michel Morosini was elected in his stead. Morosini was one who in the gloomiest time of the Chioggian war had given an inestimable pledge of his faith in the Republic by buying some house property belonging to the commune for 25,000 ducats, and when rallied by his friends for his folly, replied,¹ “If ill befall the land, I have no desire for fortune.”

Plague carried off Morosini in less than a year, and in October 1382 Antonio Venier became Doge. Peace was a brief sojourner in Italy. A long period of war and diplomacy with the despots of North Italy opens, in which Venice is now the ally and now the foe of Carrara or Visconti. Bribery, treachery and violence were among the weapons used on either side.

¹ By an unhappy misprint (ne for non) in Muratori's ed. of Sanudo, Morosini has been grievously calumniated and accused of speculating on his country's misfortune. See Romanin, iii., p. 310, and Muratori, Rerum Ital. Scriptores, xxii. 743.

Aggression on the Mainland

More than once the Senate and the Ten connived at attempts to poison their country's enemies. It was the time of the great Condottieri. Patriotism was an affair of the highest bidder. Martial courage and science were sold for a price. No gold, no army. Turk or Christian, English or German, Italian or French, all were welcome who would sell a strong arm and professional skill. English soldiers were much in demand. "Let us have as many English as possible and as few Germans and Italians." "It would be well for the Paduan contingent to be furnished with the English company, for a thousand lances of theirs are worth more than 500,000 of others." Such were the instructions of the Signory to their commanders.

In 1387, by a secret treaty, Galeozzo Visconti of Milan and the Carraras of Padua agreed to partition the Scala dominions between them. Visconti was to have Verona: the Carraras, Vicenza. The feeble descendant of Can Grande, Dante's "magnifico atque victorioso domino," became a Venetian pensioner until poison did Visconti's work in Friuli, and the widowed and orphaned family of the lord of Verona was reduced to beggary.¹ Before, however, the Carraras had realised what had happened, Visconti had stealthily seized Vicenza and they weakly appealed to Venice for support. But the wounds left by the Chioggian war were not yet healed, and the Signory lent a more willing ear to Visconti, who offered the bitter-sweet morsel of revenge and a tempting prize. Treviso became Venetian once more and territory commanding two passes into North Europe was ceded to the Republic who averted her eyes while Visconti grabbed Padua. Lord of a wide domain, Galeozzo now turned his lustful regard on Florence. Venice, alarmed at the monster she had fostered, swung round and helped the Carraras to regain Padua. But in 1402, when the aim of his life seemed near achievement, death struck Visconti down and his dominions became a prey to his generals and his enemies. The Carraras joining in the scramble attacked Vicenza and Visconti's widow appealed to Venice for help. The deal was a hard one: Verona and Vicenza were the price of a Venetian alliance. The Carraras, summoned by the Signory to raise the siege of Vicenza, stood defiant. They declared war against Venice, and when their herald reached the edict stone of St Mark's to deliver the formal challenge, he would have been stoned to death on the Piazza by the boys and populace, if some nobles who happened to be passing had not shielded him; for a story had reached Venice that when the trumpeter of the Republic arrived at the Paduan camp before Vicenza he was seized by order of Jacopo Carrara, his ears and nose cut off, and himself dismissed with the brutal jibe: "Now I have made thee a S. Marco."

¹ The last of the Scalas died a few years ago, a poor cobbler, at Verona.

Venice and its Story

The war was a triumph for Venice. In 1404 she occupied Vicenza, in 1405 Verona; three months later Padua fell to her arms. The Carraras, father and son, were captured and sent to join Jacopo (who had been taken at Verona), in a Venetian prison. So bitter was the feeling at Venice, that as they passed the people cried—"Crucify them! crucify them!" The Signory treated them leniently at first, but the seizure of the Carraras' papers at Padua revealed a great conspiracy against the Republic in which some of her own most exalted officers were implicated. The Ten assisted by a Zonta sat day and night to try the accused. On a January evening in 1406 it was bruited about the Piazza that old Carrara had been strangled in his cell: on the morrow, his two sons, it was rumoured, had met the same fate. "Dead men wage no wars" was the grim comment of the people. Another day passed and to the stupefaction of Venice Carlo Zeno, now venerable and honoured, was summoned by the Ten and ordered to be put to the question.¹ The stern decemvirs were no respecters of persons; Zeno was convicted of having corresponded with his country's enemies, stripped of his honours and imprisoned.

Aggression on the Mainland

During the early fifteenth century, Venice was riding on the full tide of territorial expansion. On the north she touched the Alps, on the west and south the Adige. Dalmatia, bought back for 200,000 florins, was retained by force of arms, and for the eighth time St Mark's banner was run up over Zara. Several feudal lords, dying without heirs, left their domains to the Republic. After a war with the Emperor and his allies she gained the province of Friuli, and reached the Carnac Alps in the east. In 1422 she had acquired Corfu, Argos, Nauplia and Corinth. A Venetian sat on St Peter's chair and two of her bishops were elevated to the Sacred College. Over this vast empire she ruled, a mother city of less than 200,000 inhabitants,² mistress of provinces and of the seas. Her wealth was prodigious.³ The pomp and circumstance of public and private life grew more and more sumptuous. Four frocks prepared for the trousseau of Jacopo Foscari's bride cost 2000 ducats.

In 1400 the famous Compagnia della Calza (Guild of the Hose) was founded to give honourable and princely entertainment among its members and to the ¹ The ordinary method of putting to the "question" was to tie the victim's hands behind him and swing him by the wrists over a pulley.

² Sanudo gives the population in 1422 as 190,000 souls.

³ In 1347, a Flanders galley, after a voyage of eight months and seven days, made a profit of 10,000 ducats.

Venice and its Story

guests of the Republic, and to contribute to the magnificence of State festivals. Brilliant suppers, serenades, jousts and regattas were organised by the members, who were drawn from the wealthiest and most illustrious families of Venice. They were divided into various companies bearing fanciful names—the Sempiterni, the Cortesi, the Immortali—and wore embroidered on their hose, lengthwise or crosswise, some quaint pattern in many colours, arabesques, stars, or figures of birds or quadrupeds. On solemn occasions the designs were formed of gold, pearls and precious stones. The doublet was of velvet or cloth of gold with slashed sleeves laced with silk ribbons; the mantle of cloth of gold or damask or crimson tabby cloth was fitted with a pointed hood, which, falling on the shoulders, displayed inside the richly embroidered device of the Company; the head was covered with a jewelled red or black cap. Pointed shoes adorned with jewels completed the costume. Ladies were admitted to membership and wore the Calza device embroidered on the sleeves of their dress. The Compagnia was subject to the control of the Ten. The festivities which celebrated the elevation of Michel Steno in 1400, now an experienced and upright officer of the State, are said to have lasted nearly a year. A significant change, however, had been made by the correctors of the Coronation Oath—the Doge was no longer to be addressed as domine mi, but plain Messer lo Doge.

On a midsummer day in 1405 a great platform was erected outside St Mark's, where Steno sat supported by his chief officers of State to receive the homage of Verona. The twenty-one Veronese ambassadors rode, clothed in white, on chargers caparisoned with white taffeta. They alighted in front of the Doge and bowed three times. High mass was then sung, after which the chief orator presented his credentials, and read an address beginning—"Glory to God in the highest." He then handed to the Doge the official seals and surrendered the keys of the Porta S. Giorgio, the Porta Vescovo and the Porta Calzoni, the first representing the knights and doctors, the second the merchants and citizens, the third the common people. Two banners, one with a white cross on a red field, another with gold cross on a blue field were then presented to the Doge, and a white wand, emblematic of purity and perpetual dominion. Steno rose and made a speech beginning, "The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light," and applied the text to the good fortune of the Veronese in coming under the dominion of Venice. The orator began his reply with, "My soul doth magnify the Lord," at the end of which the Doge gave him the golden banner of St Mark, and all cried, "Viva Messer S. Marco." The two banners of Verona were then placed on either side the high altar at St Mark's. A similar ceremony was used at the homage of Padua.

Aggression on the Mainland

Tomaso Mocenigo, "one of the noblest and wisest of the children of Venice," came to the ducal seat at a critical epoch of her history. Filippo, Visconti's son, who had inherited the fierce passions and regal ambition of his father, ruled at Milan. Having assassinated his elder brother, Giovanni, he secured the services of the greatest condottiero of the time, Francesco Bussone da Carmagnola, recovered Brescia and Genoa, and assuring himself of Venetian neutrality, seized Forlì, thus becoming a menace to Florence, who prayed for a Venetian alliance in the face of a common danger. Procurator Francesco Foscari, his sails filled with successful acquisitions in Friuli, beckoned to a forward policy and favoured the Florentine alliance: Visconti, he declared, was a danger to the State; when

Venice and its Story

Florence had been bludgeoned he would turn on Venice and rend her. Foscari was answered in the Senate by Tomaso Mocenigo, in whose mouth Sanudo places a long oration. The venerable Doge after reviewing the story of the Milanese troubles, ranged through the whole of sacred and profane history to enforce his plea for peace. He prayed the fathers to be content with defending their present frontiers if attacked: "Let the young procurator beware of the fate of Pisa that waxed rich and great by peace and good government but fell by war." He summarised the national balance-sheet and the incidence of her trade. "Let the procurator giovane remember that commerce was the basis of Venetian prosperity, peace her greatest interest. Let them trade with Milan, not fight her. They were everywhere welcomed as the purveyors of the world; their islands were a city of refuge from oppression." He then lifted his hearers to the higher spheres of religion and ethics, and warned them that God would wreak vengeance on an aggressive and unrighteous nation.

But Foscari was intriguing for the reversion of the Dogeship. He had been chief of the Quarantia; three times a capo of the Ten; his influence was great among the patricians, by reason of his lavish distribution of money, as procurator, to decayed gentlemen whose daughters he dowered from the public charities. Mocenigo, a few days after his speech in the Senate, lay on a sick bed; some senators stood around him. The Doge feeling his end draw nigh again took up his parable and solemnly entreated them as they loved their fatherland not to elect Foscari as his successor; to preserve the priceless inheritance he was about to leave them; and to keep their hands from their neighbours, for God would destroy Venice if she waged an unjust war. Let them live in peace, fear nought and mistrust the Florentines. But in truth Mocenigo's warning came a century too late. The Nemesis of Empire was already upon Venice. She was impelled to grasp more and more in order to retain what she had already won. The time had passed when so great was the fame of the incorruptible justice¹ of the Fathers that sixty envoys of princes might be found waiting in her halls to ask the judgment of the Senate on important matters of State.

Aggression on the Mainland

Foscari was elected after a close contest, and at his proclamation the last feeble echo of the popular voice was drowned. The Grand Chancellor, reviewing the old formula, asked of the Forty-one, "What if the choice is not pleasing to the people?" and himself answered, "Let us simply say we have elected such a one." Foscari was presented to the people in St Mark's with the maimed formula, "Quest' è il vostro doge": "Se vi piacerà" was heard no more. But the coronation festivities were more gorgeous than ever and lasted a whole year. The responsibility of power and the strained relations with the Emperor, for a time sobered the impetuous Foscari. Once and again the Florentine envoys were dismissed unsatisfied. After suffering a severe defeat at Zagonari, the Florentines for the third time appealed to Venice, and in an impassioned oration their ambassador threatened that if Venice permitted Filippo Visconti to make himself King of North Italy, Florence would help him to become Emperor. Meanwhile Carmagnola, who had risen from a Piedmontese hind to be an arbiter of States, had roused Visconti's suspicions and fled to Venice, where 30,000 ducats of his fortune were safely invested in the funds. The Signory paid him a handsome retaining fee and sent him to Treviso. Foscari's opportunity was now come. Carmagnola had been made a senator, and in supporting the Doge's war policy laid bare the weak parts in Visconti's position. It was to be an easy and glorious campaign. The terms of the alliance with Florence were drawn up. On February 19th, 1426, Carmagnola was appointed Captain-General, and on March 3rd laid siege to Brescia.

¹ In the reign of Francesco Dandolo.

Venice and its Story

Carmagnola proved a careful, not to say leisurely tactician, and professed much reliance on divine aid. April came, and the Captain-General asked permission to take the waters at Abano for his health's sake. The Senate consulted physicians and suggested that his presence at the siege was essential, and that an aperient might meet the case, but the Captain-General did not take the hint, and spent a pleasant time at the baths. Again in November the delicate state of his health necessitated another journey to Abano. At length Brescia surrendered; Visconti offered to negotiate, and on the last day of the year a treaty signed at S. Giorgio Maggiore gave the whole province of Brescia and a large sub-Alpine territory to the Republic.

In February of the next year Carmagnola again took the field with the finest army ever seen in Italy, for Visconti had recommenced hostilities in the Bresciano. It was a fair country. The gentle Italian spring gave way to lusty summer, and a battle had been fought in which the Republic suffered a heavy loss in horses; in another some unfortunate cavaliers, including the Captain-General himself, were dangerously hurt by falling from their chargers during a surprise attack.¹

¹ Many a great battle was lost and won in those golden days of the Condottieri at a cost of fewer casualties than now attend a football match. In 1440, during a battle of four hours, in which a crushing defeat was inflicted on the Milanese by the Florentines at Anghieri only one man was killed, and he died not of wounds or other virtuoso colpo, says

CLOISTER OF S. GREGORIO

N. RICHEN.

Venice and its Story

The Senate protested, and urged greater energy and decision. In October Carmagnola's professional pride was stung; he bestirred himself, won a brilliant victory at Macolò and captured 8000 cavalry. History is silent as to the dead and wounded. Carmagnola was lavishly rewarded, made a Count, and given a house in Venice, and an estate in the country. The Senate now advised him to follow up his advantage, strike at Milan and end the war. But Carmagnola's aim was to live, not to perish by the sword. The Republic was an excellent paymaster, and it were sorry economy to bring so profitable a business to a premature conclusion. Moreover, his adversary of to-day might be his patron of to-morrow, and his delicate constitution again required the stimulus of the baths. Visconti, too, was anxious for breathing time, and began intriguing with his former general.

In 1428 another instrument of peace gave the province of Bergamo to Venice; Carmagnola received princely honours but soon gave in his resignation. The Republic offered him a salary of one thousand ducats a month in peace or war, all ransoms and prize-money when on active service, and the promise of the dukedom of Milan was held before him. The third Milanese war began and the General's strategy was more exasperating than ever. He had no plan of campaign, and was known to be in correspondence with Visconti. The patient Senate resolved at last to act. Their members were bound to secrecy, and the Ten with a Zonta of twenty Senators were ordered to deal with the case warily but vigorously. Carmagnola's arrest was voted. Giovanni de' Imperi, secretary of the Ten, a pallid-faced notary, left for the camp with instructions to invite the General to Venice for a conference with the Doge. If he failed to take the bait, the secretary bore letters-patent addressed to the staff of the army, commanding them to concert measures for the arrest and detention of their chief. It was a perilous mission, for the mighty Captain-General held the State in the hollow of his hands. But Giovanni of the pale face and nerves of steel successfully achieved his purpose, and Carmagnola left for Venice. On his arrival he was met by eight nobles whose business it was to divert him from his home and lead him to meet the Doge. When he reached the Ducal Palace the secretary of the Ten disappeared, and Leonardo Mocenigo, procurator of the Collegio, informed the General's suite that their master was honoured by an invitation to dine with the Doge and that they might retire. As the guest passed through the apartments he noticed with some concern that the doors were closed behind him, and on asking for the Doge was answered that his Serenity was confined to his room with kidney disease, and would see him to-morrow. At the Sala delle quattro porte Carmagnola turned to go home: the officer touched his shoulder and pointed to a corridor that led to the prisons, saying, "This way, my lord." "But that is not the way!" exclaimed the great captain. "Yes, yes; quite right," repeated the officer. A signal was given: guards surrounded him and he was hustled down the stairs, crying, "I am a dead man." The eagle was shared.

Macchiavelli, but of a fall from his horse. In 1468 a battle was fought between the Venetians and Florentines, which lasted half a day at a cost of a few wounded horses: not one combatant was hurt.

Arrest of Carmagnola

At the trial Carmagnola was put to the question. As the executioner prepared the cord, Carmagnola pointed to the arm that had been broken in the service of the Republic, and a brazier was applied to his feet instead.

Venice and its Story

On May 5th, 1432, the unhappy soldier was led with a gag in his mouth to his doom between the red columns. After three blows his head fell from his shoulders. The awful tragedy had been planned and executed with consummate skill and resolution. Two hundred officials were cognisant of the process: not one opened his mouth to betray the secret. From the time the victim left Vicenza he was practically under arrest, though this he never suspected. The remains were buried in the Frari and afterwards removed to Milan. His widow was pensioned and his daughters were dowered. Four years later another enemy of the Republic lost his head between the red columns; the only surviving son of old Carrara had been convicted by the Ten of an attempt to plot an insurrection in Padua.

During the long remaining years of Foscari's reign the resources of Venice were drained by a succession of costly campaigns in defence of her conquests. The most famous condottieri, Gonzaga of Mantua, Gattamelata, Francesco Sforza, and Bartolomeo Colleoni were employed, at enormous expense. At length, in 1454, weary and exhausted by the financial, if not by the mortal drain of thirty years' war, and sobered by the appalling news of the capture of Constantinople by the Turks, the three chief belligerents—Venice, Florence, and Milan—laid down their arms and signed a defensive alliance against any power that should disturb the peace of Italy. The Venetians had held, and even added to, their conquests; Ravenna was occupied in 1440 and the last of the Polentas, father and son, died in exile at Crete. Although St Mark's Lion never looked down from his pillar on a Milanese Piazza, Venice had won the primacy of North Italy. In fifty years she had annexed eleven provinces—Treviso, Vicenza and the Sette Comuni, Verona, Padua, the Friuli, Brescia,

Reign of Francesco Foscari

Bergamo, Feltre, Belluno, Crema, Ravenna. Her yoke was easy. The subject peoples had small reason to regret the change of masters, and the Brescians endured the horrors of a three years' siege rather than

N. ENGLISH

STATUE OF BARTOLOMEO COLLEONI

revert to Milanese dominion. The Signory "that could not sleep till Brescia were relieved" organised the transport of a fleet of thirty vessels across the mountains, a distance of two hundred miles in mid-winter, lowered them down the precipitous flank of Monte Baldo and launched them on Lake Garda, a stupendous feat of engineering skill and energy. Venice never denied her enlightened and paternal rule, which embraced even the cut of ladies' dresses and the duties of wet nurses. But St Mark's "insatiable greed" had aroused the jealousies of the transalpine monarchies, and the League of Cambrai, which broke down forever the power of Venice on the mainland, was a direct outcome of Foscari's policy.

While men's minds were pre-occupied with the Milanese war and the news of the occupation of part of the Morea by the Turks, a grave domestic scandal weighed upon the Fathers. Charges of corruption were openly made against the Foscari, and in February 1445 the Doge's only surviving son, Jacopo, was denounced to the Ten for having accepted bribes to use his influence with his father in the allocation of State appointments. The young Foscari was a cultured, but pleasure-loving noble, whose magnificent marriage festivities in 1441 had aroused even the critical Venetians to enthusiasm. He was charged with "having regard neither to God nor man, and accepting gifts of money and jewels against the law," and cited to appear on the 18th before the Tribunal of the Ten, who were assisted by a Zonta of ten nobles. The arrest of his valet, Gaspero, on the previous day had, however, aroused Jacopo's suspicions; and when the officer of the Ten tried to serve the warrant, it was discovered that Foscari had fled to Trieste with all the money he could lay hands on. The tribunal having excluded the Doge and all his relations, proceeded to try the accused in default. The members were declared inviolable and permitted to wear arms. Jacopo was found guilty, and banished for life to Nauplia. The Dogaresa was refused permission to visit him at Trieste, and Marco Trevisano with a galley was sent thither to deport him. Meesser Jacopo, however, treated the warrant with contempt, and refused to embark. The price of contumacy was outlawry, and decapitation between the two columns, but the Ten did not enforce the extreme penalty, and entreated the Doge to persuade his son to obey the law. All his efforts were futile, and on April 7th the sentence was confirmed, and Jacopo's property confiscated.

The Two Foscari

For more than a year the outlaw had been living defiantly at Trieste, when fresh revelations led to the co-optation of another Zonta to deal further with the scandal. Five months passed; Marco Trevisano died, and Jacopo fell sick at Trieste. The Ten thereupon resolved to accept, in the name of Jesus Christ, the excuses of the invalid for not proceeding to Nauplia, and to substitute his own country house near Treviso for the place of exile.

We hear nothing more of the case until April 1447, when a chest containing 2040 ducats and some silver plate was discovered, and proven to have been received by Jacopo from the Duke of Milan: the contents of the chest were confiscated, but no further action was taken. In September, Francesco presented a piteous petition for his son's pardon. The Ten resolved that, since the present critical state of public affairs demanded a prince with a clear and untroubled mind, Jacopo should be restored to his family, as an act of piety to our lord the Doge. Three years elapsed, and on a November evening, as Ermolao Donato, one of the Capi who had tried Jacopo, was leaving the palace after attending a meeting of the Senate, he was fatally stabbed: the Ten and a Zonta met to investigate, but failed to penetrate the mystery.

On January 2nd, 1451, a signed denunciation was found in the Bocca del leone. Jacopo Foscari was arrested, and put to the question, but some incoherent muttering, which the Ten thought to be an incantation, was all that could be forced from his lips. The trial dragged on until March 26th, when Jacopo was declared, on purely circumstantial evidence, guilty of the murder, and banished to Canea, in Crete, where he was to report himself daily to the Podestà. The Doge was exhorted to patience, and on the 29th the condemned Jacopo was put on a galley that was sailing for Crete. In the June of 1456 important despatches in cypher from Canea came before the Ten: the home-sick and intolerant Foscari had written a letter to the Duke of Milan, asking him to intercede with the Signory, and another to the Turkish Sultan, begging that a vessel might be sent to Crete to abduct him from the island. Jacopo and all his household were cited to Venice. Before the Ten he frankly confessed all, and the sentence was then debated. A Capo, Jacopo Loredano, proposed the death penalty. The motion was lost, and his relegation to Canea and a year's imprisonment were voted. His family were permitted to see him, and Jacopo, bearing marks of the torture, was led into the room, where his father awaited him. The poor old Doge fell upon his son's neck, while Jacopo cried, "Father, father, I beseech you procure for me permission to return to my home." "Jacopo," answered the Doge, "thou¹ must obey the will of the land, and strive no more." As the door closed on his son for ever, the miserable Francesco flung himself upon a chair, uttering lamentations and moaning, "O! the great pity of it!" In six months came news from Canea: Jacopo Foscari was dead. The Doge never recovered from the blow: he secluded himself in his room, and sank into hopeless, sullen grief. The most urgent affairs of State could not divert him from his sorrow; the very Government was paralysed, and the Ten were called to devise a way out of the dead-lock. Having excluded the Doge's relations, after long debate they decided to invite Francesco in his great charity to take pity on the land and freely resign. They offered a pension of fifteen hundred ducats, and gave him a day to consider his answer. On the morrow, he would say neither yea nor nay, and complained of the unconstitutional suggestion. A second deputation was no more successful and it was then intimated to the Doge that he must resign, and leave the palace within a week, or suffer the confiscation of his property.

¹ The Doge uses the familiar tu: Jacopo the formal voi.

The Two Foscari

On Sunday the 23rd of October, in the presence of the Ten and the chief officers of State, Francesco silently drew the ducal ring from his finger. A Capo broke it in pieces, removed the ducal cap from his head, and the dis-crowned Doge was bid to retire to his home in S. Pantaleone. As the Councillors were leaving the room he noticed that one of the Quarantia lingered awhile and gazed pityingly upon him. He called him, took his hand and asked: "Whose son art thou?" "I am the son of Marin Memo," was the reply. "He is my dear comrade," said the Doge, "prithee bid him come to see me, for it will be a precious solace to me: we will visit the monasteries together." Early on the morrow Francesco Foscari left his apartments leaning on a crutched stick accompanied by his brother Marco, his only suite a few sobbing kinsmen and servants. As they neared the principal staircase Marco said: "It is well, your Serenity, that we go to the landing-stage by the other stairway which is covered." "Nay," answered Francesco, "I will descend by the same stairs up which I mounted to the Dogeship." Stripped of his honours, forsaken by his Councillors, bent beneath the weight of his eighty-four years and the long tenure of a great office, the humiliated Foscari tottered down those steps in silence, which more than the third of a century before he had climbed, erect, exultant, full of hope, amid the acclamation of a whole city.

Venice and its Story

The Great Council met the same day : the electoral machinery was set in motion and on the morrow, the

NERICHEN

BUST OF FRANCESCO FOSCARI

30th October, Pasquale Malipiero was chosen and proclaimed Doge two hours before sunset. Two days after, on All Saints' Day, Malipiero and his Council were at mass at St Mark's when a messenger came in hot haste with the news that Francesco Foscari was dead. The Councillors gazed mutely at each other. The Ten were convoked and, pricked perhaps by remorse at their severity, voted a magnificent and honourable funeral, the widow protesting against the mockery and declaring that she would sell her dowry to give her lord worthy burial. Wrapped in a mantle of cloth of gold ; crowned with the ducal cap ; sword by side and spurred with gold, all that remained of great Doge Foscari lay in state in the hall of the Senate, guarded by four and twenty nobles in scarlet robes to indicate that if the Doge were dead the Signory yet lived. The bier was borne by a picked body of sailors : Malipiero, clothed as a simple senator ; the officers of State ; the clergy ; the guilds followed. With solemn pomp the pageant went its way, lighted by innumerable tapers, along the Merceria and across the Rialto bridge to the Church of the Frari where a sumptuous monument, erected in the choir to his memory, by Antonio Riccio, still testifies to his fame. Those who would gaze on the striking, sensuous features of unhappy Doge Foscari will find his bust in the corridor that leads to the private apartments of the ducal palace, a faithful portrait carved by Bartolomeo Buon. It was rescued when the original group over the Porta della Carta was destroyed in 1797.

The Cost of Empire

Tomaso Mocenigo left Venice at peace with a flourishing exchequer : under Foscari it became bankrupt. In ten years the Milanese war had cost seven million sequins. The funds which stood at 60 when it began, sank to 18½ before its close. Her hands tied by the war, Venice had been compelled to look on while Constantinople fell to the Turks. Increased taxes, forced loans, national default and commercial crises, non-payment of salaries, depreciation of real estate, depression of industry and reduction of population—this was the cost of military glory ; the dark background to the brilliant and memorable reign of Francesco Foscari.

CHAPTER X

The Turkish Terror—Acquisition of Cyprus—Discovery of the Cape Route to India—The French Invasions—The League of Cambray—Decline of Venice

“The gods have done it as to all they do
Destine destruction, that from thence may rise
A poem to instruct posterities.”

—Chapman's Homer.

IN the eyes of Italian and European statesmen, Venice at the death of Doge Foscari seemed mightier than ever, but in truth she had already passed the meridian of her strength and was on the descending arc of her destiny. For a century her consuls had warned the Signory of danger in the East. Pope after pope had summoned his children to cease their fratricidal strife and unite to meet the Turkish peril. During the pauses in the fierce clash of Christian passions and ambitions, could be heard, like the beat of muffled drums, the tread of the advancing infidel hosts sounding the doom of an empire. But no state in Europe, least of all Venice, grasped the full significance of the portent.

In 1416 a fleet had been sent to chastise the Sultan for permitting a violation of treaty rights, and although in the words of the commander, the Turks fought like dragons, yet by the grace of God and the help of the evangelist S. Marco they were utterly routed and the greater part cut in pieces: he was confident on the testimony of a captured Emir that the Turks would never again venture to oppose the Venetians on the seas. Again and again the Greek Emperors had besought in person the pope and the princes of Christendom to lend them aid, but concerted action against the Turks was as difficult then as it has proved to be in modern times. In 1369 the Emperor John Paleologus, returning from a barren mission to Rome, was detained at Venice until his debts were paid. In 1438 a Greek Emperor was at Venice imploring her aid and that of Europe against the enemy of Christendom. Twice in 1452 the appeal was repeated and enforced by papal entreaties, but the Christian princes were too busy with their own quarrels to listen, and before a year passed the scimitar of the Turk was red with the blood of the Christians at Constantinople. Had not Venice herself proven that the strong city was not impregnable?¹ When it fell the Republic adopted her usual policy. She accepted the situation and secured her trading privileges by treaty with the Sultan. But when news came in 1436 of the conquest of the Morea and Epirus and that the crescent was flying over the Castle of Argos almost within sight of the Adriatic, Venice no longer stopped her ears to the Papal voice. Friar Michael of Milan was permitted to preach the crusade in the Piazza and a big, iron box was placed in St Mark's for offerings of money.

The Turkish Terror

¹ The Bashi-bazouks of Mohammed the Conqueror's army encamped on the very ground chosen by the Crusaders in 1204. It is worthy of remembrance, however, that a small band of Venetian traders and seamen, including some of noble family, stayed with six of their vessels to take part in the defence per honor de Dio et de tuta la Christianitate. They were assigned, with the other Italians, to the posts of greatest danger on the walls and at the boom across the Golden Horn.

Venice and its Story

Cristoforo Moro, the new Doge, addressed the Great Council, and in an access of zeal volunteered to lead the crusade: by 1607 ballots against 11 the Great Council approved. Moro¹ was a devout but not very robust creature, and pleading age and infirmity asked permission to withdraw. He was bluntly told by Vettor Cappello to think less of his skin and more of the honour and welfare of the land.

Pius II. came to Ancona with the Sacred College to organise the crusade. A league was made with Hungary, and the Duke of Burgundy offered to join in person: envoys were sent to other Christian princes. On July 30th, 1464, three hours before sunset—a time selected by the astrologers as the best—the Venetian fleet weighed anchor, the Doge leading in a new galley named after him. Scarcely had he disembarked at Ancona when the Pope died and all came to naught. The Venetians single-handed fought on sea and land with their usual intrepidity, but the Republic was already weakened by the Milanese wars. In 1470 she lost the whole island of Negropont. Dazed by the calamity the members of the Collegio slowly walked with leaden feet and downcast looks across the Piazza and, if spoken to, answered not a word. Were they listening to the rustle of the wings of the sable-robed avenging sisters?

¹ Ruskin, by a curious misunderstanding of Rawdon Brown, has confused this Doge (who, according to a contemporary was a short-statured squint-eyed creature) with the original of Shakespeare's "Othello," and the error has since been repeated. Rawdon Brown's ingenious identification of the Moor of Venice with one Cristoforo Moro, refers to another Venetian of that name who lived a generation later and was a prominent official in the service of the Republic during the wars of the League of Cambrai. Cf. Ruskin, "Stones of Venice," vol. ii. p. 302, note, with Rawdon Brown's "Ragguali sulla vita e sulle opere di M. Sanuto," Parte I. pp. 229-235.

The Turkish Terror

In the following year a crowd of panic-stricken refugees from Istria and Friuli streamed into Venice and camped on the Piazza and under the arcades of the ducal palace. An army of 20,000 Turks had ravaged the provinces even up to Udine. The Republic was now at the end of her resources. An attempted diversion from Persia had failed; a big loan from her mainland provinces had been swallowed up; the Pope sent her envoys empty away. Not one Italian state stirred to help her. The good Tomaso Mocenigo's warnings were verified. National wrong meant national sorrow. Venice was harvesting the acrid fruit of the Genoese wars and her fifty years of territorial aggression. At the Congress¹ of Carisano in 1466 Galeazzo Sforza, Duke of Milan, had warned the Secretary of the Republic that she was hated not only in Italy but beyond the Alps. "You do a grievous wrong," he vehemently exclaimed; "you possess the fairest State in Italy, yet are not satisfied. You disturb the peace and covet the states of others. If you knew the ill-will universally felt towards you, the very hair of your head would stand on end. Do you think the states of Italy are leagued against you out of love to each other? No; necessity has driven them. They have bound themselves together for the fear they have of you and of your power. They will not rest till they have clipped your wings."

Negotiations were twice begun with a view to peace, but the Sultan's demands were intolerable and the unequal contest continued. In 1476 Friuli was again devastated and the flames of burning cities could be seen from St Mark's tower; sailors were clamouring for their arrears of pay on the very steps of the ducal palace ; Scutari (in Albania), after heroically resisting two sieges, was nearing the end ; a loan from the mainland provinces and 100,000 ducats from the sum left to the Republic by their condottiero Colleoni were swallowed up. In January 1479 Venice yielded. She ceded Scutari, Stalimene and other territory in the Morea occupied by the Turks during the war, in exchange for which the Sultan restored all that had been taken from her beyond her old boundaries. She maintained consular jurisdiction in Constantinople, but agreed to pay an indemnity of 200,000 ducats and a tribute of 10,000 ducats a year for her trading privileges. It was in Moro's reign that the last vestige of popular government was effaced. The title of "Communitas Venetiarum," long disused in actual practice, was formally changed to the "Signoria."

¹ Met to deal with the situation created by the attempt of the famous Venetian Condottiero Colleoni to win the duchy of Milan in collusion with the Florentine exiles.

Venice and its Story

During the wearing anxieties of the Turkish wars from the death of Moro in 1471 to the signature of the peace under Doge Giovanni Mocenigo in 1479 four Doges, Nicolo Tron, Nicolo Marcello, Pietro Mocenigo, and Andrea Vendramin followed in rapid succession, the last a descendant of a family ennobled after the Chioggian war. The delimitation of the new frontiers had been barely concluded in the East when a dispute concerning salterns and custom dues on the Po and the arrest of a priest for debt by the Venetian Visdominio at Ferrara led to another war in the peninsula. In 1482 the whole of Italy was aflame, and states that had watched unmoved the agony of the sixteen years' Turkish wars now turned on Venice and accused her of sinister motives in concluding the peace. The Republic was now allied with Ludovico Sforza (Il Moro) the powerful and magnificent despot of Milan, Genoa and the Papacy against Ercole, Duke of Ferrara, who was supported by the King of Naples, by

Acquisition of Cyprus

Florence and some minor Italian states. The early operations were in her favour: she won the whole of the Ferrarese beyond the Po, saved Rome from capture by inflicting a crushing defeat on the Royalists at Campo Morto, and gave, as she boasted, the Pope a triumph unparalleled in Rome since Imperial times of old. But in a few months Sixtus IV. broke faith with his ally, joined the league against Venice, and as feudal lord of Ferrara, summoned her, under pain of excommunication, to abandon operations against that city. When the interdict reached the Venetian Embassy at Rome, their ambassador was absent and his agent refused to transmit the document to Venice. It was then fixed on the doors of St Peter's and afterwards forwarded to the Patriarch at Venice, who was ordered to serve it on the Signory.¹ The Patriarch fell diplomatically sick and secretly informed the Doge. The Ten were convoked; the Patriarch was warned to keep silence, and that the services of the Church must proceed as usual. The Pope was a long way off; the Ten were near; he obeyed them. A formal appeal was then made to a future Council of the Church and a copy nailed by a secret agent on the door of S. Celso at Rome.

The new combination was too powerful for the crippled resources of Venice. Driven into a corner she countered the Pope's appeal to the King of Hungary to invade her territory by inviting Charles VIII. of France to make good his claim to Naples and the Duke of Orleans to vindicate his rights over the duchy

¹ In 1483 the Flanders galleys were attacked by a famous Spanish privateer; 130 Venetians were killed, 300 wounded, and an enormous booty was taken. The Signory demanded satisfaction from the Emperor Charles VII., which was refused on the plea that Venice was under the ban of the Church. A certain Christopher Columbus was serving among the Spaniards.

Venice and its Story

of Milan. Both sides at length grew weary of the war. It had cost Venice 1,200,000 ducats, an empty arsenal and valuable lives. To the disgust of the Pope peace was made and the treaty of Bagnolo (1484) added Rovigo and the Polesine to the Venetian dominions. Three days' jousts, bell-ringing, illumination and rejoicing celebrated the immediate results of the new diplomacy. But the successors of Louis XI. were now factors in Italian politics: the league of Cambrai was one stage nearer.

For a few years all went well. By a clever exploitation of dynastic trouble the Signory was able to acquire the long coveted island of Cyprus. On the death of King John II., Carlotta, the rightful heiress and wife of Louis of Savoy, banished her father's bastard son James and seated herself on the throne. By the help of the Sultan of Egypt James was able before a year was past to lead a revolt, expel the Queen and her consort from the island and seize the crown. He made friends with the Venetians and to ensure their goodwill desired the Signory to bestow on him the hand of a Venetian maiden of noble birth. Caterina, daughter of Marco Cornaro, who with two other patrician houses held the greater part of the island in mortgage, was chosen and given a dowry valued at 100,000 ducats. The espousals were quickly celebrated with great pomp, the Doge himself presenting a consecrated ring to James' proxy, the Cypriote ambassador, who placed it on Caterina's finger in the name of the King of Cyprus. The little maid was but fourteen years of age and went from the splendour of the ducal palace to her usual life at home, while James was affirming his authority in the island.

During the same year (1468) the Senate learnt that Ferdinand of Naples was intriguing to draw James into an alliance with his own family. Stern words were used to the King and at length in October 1469 Venice was able to proclaim that she had taken the King and the island of Cyprus under her protection. In the summer of 1472, escorted by a fleet of four galleys, Caterina sailed to make a royal entry into Cyprus, but in a few months James died, leaving her with child, and her joy was changed to mourning. The Senate, aware that Carlotta was busy with the Italian powers and the Sultan, despatched their Captain-General, Pietro Mocenigo, to protect Caterina and to fortify and garrison the chief stations on the island. Before he arrived, the partizans of Carlotta burst into the palace, slew Caterina's physician before her eyes and cut in pieces her uncle Andrea and her cousin Bembo who were hastening to her aid. Mocenigo on his arrival quelled the insurrection and hanged the ringleaders. Two Venetian Councillors and a Civil Commissioner were then sent to watch events. Caterina gave birth to a prince but the child died in a few months, and the Signory fearing a reversion of power to the former dynasty deported James' mother, sister and bastard sons to Venice and despatched Marco Cornaro with instructions to comfort his daughter, to maintain the allegiance of the Cypriotes, and to declare the absolute will of the Republic that no change should take place in the order of things. An emissary of Ferdinand, Rizzo di Mario, was caught plotting at Alexandria, sent to Venice and condemned to death by the Ten. The Sultan, who had known him as the ambassador of Naples, threatened the Republic with his displeasure if the sentence were carried out: the Ten had Rizzo strangled in prison and informed the Sultan that he had poisoned himself.

Acquisition of Cyprus

The Signory now determined to force Caterina's hand. Subtly but firmly the two Councillors and the Commissioner usurped more and more power, and poor

Venice and its Story

Caterina's position was made intolerable. She wrote pitiful letters to the Doge complaining of the insults and petty persecutions suffered by herself and her father; scuffles took place on the very stairs of the palace. In October 1488 her brother Giorgio was sent by the Ten to persuade her to abdicate, while Captain-General Diedo was instructed to haste to Cyprus and "by wise, circumspect, cautious and secure means to get the Queen on board a galley and bring her here to us at Venice." To persuasions and threats Caterina at last yielded. The banner of St Mark floated over Cyprus and an envoy assured the Sultan of Egypt of the sympathy of the new government which was the "consequence of the full and free determination of our most serene and most beloved daughter Caterina Cornaro." The deposed Queen received a pompous welcome at Venice; made a solemn renunciation and a formal donation of Cyprus to the Republic in St Mark's; and went to live in petty state at the little township of Asolo which was given to her by the Republic. There, the centre of a literary circle, she passed many years of her life in works of charity, until the storm of the league of Cambrai drove her for shelter to Venice, where she died, universally mourned, in 1509. To the end she signed herself Queen of Cyprus, Jerusalem and Armenia, and Signora of Asolo.

During the closing years of the fifteenth century the mercantile supremacy of Venice, already threatened by the Ottoman conquests, was doomed by two momentous geographical discoveries. The voyages of Columbus and of Diaz were to change the face of Europe from the Mediterranean to the Atlantic, and to shift the commercial centre of the world from Venice to the Spanish peninsula and ultimately to England. The former event excited curiosity in

The Cape Route to India

Venice, but not alarm. The Secretary of the Venetian Embassy in Spain, with the alertness of his class,¹ won the confidence of Columbus, and finding him short of money, was able to secure a chart of his discoveries and a copy of a long treatise on the voyage, which he caused to be translated and sent to the Signory.

Far otherwise was the effect of the latter event, by which the ancient trade routes to the East were to be superseded by the ocean route to India. Priuli gives a graphic story of the consternation which seized the citizens, when, in the early sixteenth century, the report was verified that Vasco da Gama with a Portuguese fleet had reached Calcutta by rounding the Cape of Good Hope, and had returned to Lisbon with a cargo of spices. The wiser heads at once saw the gravity of the news. Owing to the heavy dues exacted by the sultans and princes the cost of a parcel of spices was increased from one ducat to sixty or a hundred by the time it reached Venice. The Portuguese, carrying by sea, would escape the levies and undersell the Venetian merchants in the markets of Europe, and their large and profitable trade from the East would be captured. Leonardo da Ca' Masser disguised as a merchant was sent to Lisbon to get information. An attempt was made to throttle the nascent commerce by working on the fears of the Sultan of Egypt. Envoys were sent to warn him of the danger to his revenue if the Portuguese were allowed to succeed, and to urge him to ally himself with the Indian princes, and give military aid if necessary, to destroy their trade. But the efforts of

¹ A few years later the Venetian ambassador writes from Seville that he saw many strange things from the Indies at the Spanish court, and did eat of certain roots called Batatas which tasted like chestnuts.

Venice and its Story

Venice availed nothing, for they were directed against the very course of the world's progress.

The flourishing Eastern trade began to wither, but events seemed to offer opportunity of compensation by permitting a forward policy on the mainland. In 1493 Il Moro, desirous of external support in his usurpation of the dukedom of Milan, despatched his young wife Beatrice d' Este to woo his old enemy the Signory of Venice. She charmed all hearts by her wit, beauty and sumptuous apparel, and was magnificently lodged at the grand old Byzantine palace of the Estes on the Grand Canal subsequently known as the Fondaco de' Turchi. Of the brilliant festivals, jousts and processions that celebrated her coming we possess an animated description in some letters from Beatrice to her lord, published by Molmenti and now accessible to readers of English in Mrs Ady's admirable translation,¹ though we do not end our perusal without some sympathy with the Bishop of Como, who suffered severely from boredom at the long performance in the Ducal Palace, and declared that never would he come to another. Beatrice, after seeing the sights of Venice, and lingering at the fine shops in the Merceria, returned to Milan with many expressions of friendship from the Doge, but with no definite result from her mission. It was not long before Charles VIII. at the invitation of Il Moro set forth with an army such as had never before been seen in the peninsula to achieve his designs on the kingdom of Naples, and from his camp at Asti came to Venice Philippe de Comines as an envoy seeking alliance with the Republic. The French diplomatist in his memoirs has left us a charming description of Venice as it appeared in 1494.

As he approached the city he marvelled at the innumerable towers and monasteries, the fair churches,

¹ Beatrice d' Este, London, 1889.

PALAZZO DARIO

N

Venice and its Story

the great mansions and fine gardens all founded in the sea. Twenty-five nobles, well and richly clad in fine silk and scarlet cloth, bade him welcome and conducted him to a boat, large enough to seat forty persons, covered with satin cramoisy and richly carpeted. He was prayed to take his seat between the ambassadors of Milan and Ferrara. "I was taken," he writes, "along the grande rue, which they call the Grand Canal, and it is very broad. Galleys cross it, and I have seen great ships of four hundred tons and more near the houses, and it is the fairest street I believe that may be in the whole world, and fitted with the best houses, and it goes the whole length of the said city. The mansions are very large and high and of good stone; the ancient ones all painted. Others, made a hundred years ago, are faced with white marble, and yet have many a great piece of porphyry and serpentine on the front. Inside they have chambers with gilded ceilings and rich chimney-pieces of carved marble, gilded bedsteads of wood, and are well furnished. It is the most triumphant city I have ever seen and that doeth most honour to ambassadors and to strangers, and that most wisely doth govern itself, and where the service of God is most solemnly done: and though they may have many faults I believe that God hath them in remembrance for the reverence they bear to the service of His Church."

The Most Christian King, if we may believe the Venetian ambassador Contarini, lacked many inches of regal majesty. He was short in stature, ill-formed, had an ugly face, prominent white eyes, a big, coarse, aquiline nose, thick lips always open, and a nervous twitching of the hands very unpleasant to see. He was slow in expressing himself and dull-witted. Nor was Anne of Brittany, the Queen, portrayed less rudely. She, says the ungallant diplomatist, was short, bony and lame, with a rather pretty face. She was only seventeen, but most astute for her age, inordinately jealous of the King's majesty, and always succeeded in getting her way by the use of smiles or tears. The Cristianissimo marched triumphantly through the length of Italy to realise his dream of winning Naples, and then overthrowing the Mussulman power in the East. Florence, Rome,¹ Naples were successively occupied; the balance of Italian politics was disastrously overthrown, and the unhappy land soon became a cockpit where the rival ambitions of France and Spain were fought out. Milan and Venice had each thought to use the Transalpine Powers for her own ends; they both became their prey. To this day may be seen that dungeon in the Martelet at Loches in Touraine with its piteous mural inscriptions, where after nine years' captivity, the once great and glorious Lord of Milan came to a miserable end in 1510; in the same year Venice bowed her head to the Pope in St Peter's at Rome.

French Invasions

Charles had himself crowned King of Naples, Emperor of the East, and King of Jerusalem, but soon discovered that to conquer was easier than to hold. The rival powers began to league themselves against him; in the bewildering moves on the political chess-board Venice and Milan came into line, and De Comines left his home near S. Giorgio Maggiore in anger and dismay after witnessing the triumph of his enemies' diplomacy and the gorgeous festival that ¹ It was during this march that the French captured Giulia Farnese, the pope's latest mistress, her sister, and Madonna Adriana, the guardian of Lucrezia Borgia, his daughter by Vannozza. They were ransomed for 3000 ducats to the disgust of Il Moro, who declared that they were the very eyes and heart of his holiness, who could not live without them, and would have agreed to any conditions to recover possession of them.

Venice and its Story

attended the proclamation of the new league against France. The Signory assured De Comines that his master should have a free passage for the return of his army through Italy; in July of the same year she concerted with Milan, and fell upon the French at Fornovo di Taro, as they were toiling down the Cisa Pass to Parma. The French were severely punished, and in the fighting the King himself narrowly escaped capture. How the news was received at Venice, a letter dated July 9, 1495, and transcribed by Malipiero, gives a vivid picture. "I arose early and went my usual way to St Mark's," says Nicolo Lippomano, "when I saw a great fury of people running to the Piazza, crying—'Marco! Marco!' I asked the cause and was told the French camp had been routed. I arrived at the corner of St Mark's, where the elders are wont to meet, and found them all glad and many shed tears for joy. I went to Rialto and found everybody talking of the victory, and one kissed the other for very gladness. In a trice all the banks and shops were closed. Boys with flags began to run about the streets shouting of the victory and sacking the fruit-sellers' shops on the way. On the Rialto they met eight Savoyards whom they pelted with eggs, lemon peel and turnips, and otherwise ill-treated. All the people shouted—'To Ferrara! to Ferrara!' All my days I never saw the city in greater uproar. To God be the praise."

The spot is still shown where, in 1498, Charles broke his foolish head against a beam in a dark passage of the castle at Amboise. His successor, Louis XII., to the ill-hap of Italy, united in his person the claims both of the Orleans princes to Milan and of the French kings to Naples. Ludovico Sforza, fearing for his duchy, again approached the Signory, but, to his disgust, learned that Venice had already secretly agreed to aid Louis in his designs on Milan, in return for Crenona and other cities and lands on the east of the Adda. Sforza, to revenge himself on Venice, invited the Turks to attack her. In twenty days Louis had won the Milanese; Venice was paid the price of her shame, and Duke Moro was a fugitive.

The Turks again

While the Christian states were rending each other despatches from Constantinople warned the Signory that the Sultan was preparing to attack. Strenuous efforts were made to raise money. Antonio Grimani was sent with a large fleet to the East, and came upon the enemy off Sapienza, a name of ill-omen in Venetian history. The Turks had made amazing progress in naval construction; one of their ships is said to have been manned by a thousand Janissaries and sailors. The first encounter, after four hours' fighting, ended on August 12, 1499, in a Turkish success. On August 20, a small French fleet joined the Venetians, and on the 25th the final engagement was fought. The Venetians suffered a disastrous defeat. Malipiero, who was present as civil commissioner, roundly accused Grimani of want of patriotism and faint-heartedness, and declared if he had done his duty, the whole Turkish fleet would have fallen into their hands surely as God was God, and that, owing to want of discipline among the Venetian sailors, the French had retired disgusted from the operations. "We have lost eight hundred men, and the reputation of Venice." Grimani was sent home in irons. As he landed, his son, Cardinal Domenico, fought his way through the furious crowd, shouting savage abuse¹ of the fallen

¹ Antonio Grimani
Ruina de' cristiani
Rebello de' Venetiani
Puostu esser manzà dâ cani;
Dâ cani e da' cagnolli
Ti e to fiolli!

Venice and its Story

captain, and lifted his father's chains to lighten his burden as he was led to prison. At the trial Grimani defended himself eloquently, and was banished to Dalmatia.

The operations on land were not less humiliating. Such was the paralysing terror inspired by the Turk, that the native militia in Friuli refused to take the field, and the commander of the Stradiote mercenaries struck not a blow. Venice sued for peace. She weakly tried to inculcate Sforza for the outbreak of hostilities, but was told that the Duke of Milan had no power to move the Sultan; the depredations of her own subjects were the cause of her chastisement. On trying to soften the hard conditions exacted, her envoy was advised to bid the Signory hasten to accept the Sultan's terms: "Tell your Doge," said the Pacha, "that up to the present he has wedded the sea; it will be our turn in future, for we own more of the sea than he does." The Signory rejected the terms offered by the Porte. Allies were sought, and a league was made with the King of Hungary and the Pope. The King of Portugal promised help; Spain sent a fleet; France a small contingent of men. Some small successes failed to compensate for the loss of Lepanto, Modone, Corone and Navarino. Practically Venice was left, as usual, to fight single-handed, and ultimately peace was made with the Sultan, at the price of further territory in the Morea. Before the treaty was concluded, Agostino Barbarigo, who had succeeded his brother Marco in 1486, died, and in October 1501, Leonardo Loredano, whose shrewd, clear-cut and ascetic features in Giovanni Bellini's portrait, are so familiar to visitors to the National Gallery of London, was preferred to the Dogeship. Owing to poor health, says Sanudo, he lived abstemiously. He was kindly, though of uneven temper, wise in counsel, very skilful in the conduct of public business, and his opinion generally prevailed with the Council.

The League of Cambrai

In August 1503 the death of Pope Alexander VI. had foiled the plans of his bastard son, Cesare Borgia, to recover Romagna for the Papacy. Venice had been closely watching events, and on the advent of the feeble Pius III., determined to slice up the Papal States. Instructions were sent to the podestà of Ravenna, informing him of certain negotiations between the Signory and some cities of Romagna. He was to confer with the military commanders, in order to bring the negotiations quickly to a successful issue; but he was to act cautiously and secretly. The chief cities, by promise of remission of taxation, placed themselves under Venetian protection; the Duke of Urbino followed their lead, and was promised an annual subsidy. During the twenty-six days of Pius III.'s reign, and the interval between his death and the election of a successor, Venice had occupied Bertinoro, Fano and Montefiore, and was hastening to seize Rimini and Imola. Julius II., at first favourably inclined to Venice, was in a few weeks made her enemy by the occupation of Rimini and the capture of Faenza. To Julius' angry protests and his threat of winning back Romagna, cost what it might, Venice urged her devotion to holy Church and the benevolence of her motives in trying to free Italy from the tyranny of Cesare Borgia. "Signor Oratore," cried the Pope, "your words are good, but your Signory's deeds are evil. We have neither men nor money to make war, but we will complain to the Christian princes, and invoke divine aid."¹ To

¹ The firm, resolute features of this grand old Pontiff look out to us from Raphael's portrait of him in the National Gallery of London.

Venice and its Story

Julius' demand for restitution, the Signory answered, "We will never restore the territory, even though we have to sell the very foundations of our houses."

"I tell you," wrote De Comines, after his return from Venice in 1495, "that I have found Venetian statesmen so wise and so bent upon increasing their Signory that if it be not soon provided against, all their neighbours will curse the hour." The provisions made by the most Christian princes were characteristic. "By an unprincipled treaty of spoliation," says Rawdon Brown, "the Great Powers of the Continent bound themselves together to fall upon Venice by surprise in a time of profound peace, and, in despite of the most solemn obligations, to despoil her of her territories." After much treatying and protocolling there met on a November day in 1508 in a secret chamber at Cambrai—ostensibly to arrange a treaty of peace between the Archduke and the Duke of Gueldres—the Cardinal d'Amboise acting for the King of France, and Margaret of Austria for the Holy Roman Emperor. The papal nuncio and the King of Spain's envoy were near, but their views were known, and for greater safety they were not allowed to enter. The Cardinal, to lull the suspicions of the Venetians, assured their oratore by a solemn oath¹ that his royal master intended to persevere in his alliance with them. After many difficulties, says Romanin, and such altercations that they well-nigh tore out each other's hair (s'acciuffassero pei capegli) the plenipotentiaries decided "that, since their common desire to undertake a united and holy war against the enemies of Christ was solely thwarted by the ambition of Venice, it was not only useful and honourable but necessary to call upon all the Powers of Europe to take a just vengeance, and quench, as they would a general conflagration, the insatiable greed of the Venetians and their thirst of dominion." The day after the conclusion of the treaty the Cardinal, Margaret of Austria, and the Spanish Ambassador attended mass in the Church, where the confirmation of the treaty was made by solemn oath, and all that was publicly proclaimed was, that perpetual peace and alliance had been contracted by the high and mighty Christian princes. The modest reward which the Powers proposed to themselves for "making an end of the rapine and injury wrought by the Venetians and their tyrannical usurpation of the possessions of others," was as follows. His Holiness the Pope was to have Ravenna, Cervia, Faenza, Rimini and all the territory held by the Venetians in Romagna; the Emperor: Padua, Vicenza, Verona, Roveredo, the Trevisano, the Friuli and Istria; the King of France: Brescia, Bergamo, Crema, Cremona, the Ghiaradadda and all the dependencies of the Duke of Milan; the King of Spain and of Naples: Trani, Brindisi, Otranto, Gallipoli and other cities held in pledge by Venice for an unpaid loan to his cousin whom he had deprived of the kingdom of Naples. The King of Hungary, if he joined, was to have Dalmatia; the Duke of Savoy, Cyprus. Some offal was reserved for the jackals of the minor states, if they ran at the heels of the royal beasts of prey. Florence later on informed the Sultan of Turkey and invited him to seize the oriental possessions of Venice when she was down. The Pope was to reinforce the temporal weapons of the confederates by the use of the spiritual arm.

¹ Giuramenti gravissimi. Guicciardini.

The League of Cambrai

But the Lion of St Mark, though his claws were a little blunted and his joints stiffened, had not lost his cunning. Moreover, he was forewarned. A dramatic story of the premature disclosure of the plot is told in the Venetian State papers. Spinola, an emissary of Gonsalvo of Cordova, came secretly to Cornaro, the Venetian ambassador, at Valladolid, in February 1509, and asked him to meet the great captain at mass in an unfrequented church at the far end of the town. He went and the secret was revealed to him. He refused to believe it, but later Spinola showed him a copy of a letter from Gonsalvo's wife at Genoa in which the details of the proposed partition were given, and offered his master's services to the Signory. Cornaro informed the Ten. They, too, hesitated to believe in any cause for attack, advised caution, and asked for further proof. Secret information from England soon brought confirmation and the Ten sat day and night to prepare for the coming storm. The weakness of the league lay in the fact that each spoiler was to seize his own share of the prey. Self-interest was its motive power: self-interest would lead individual members to abandon the hunt if their portion were thrown to them. This the Ten quickly grasped and acted upon with consummate art and patience while pushing on with all speed defensive military operations. The aged and infirm Doge Loredano, so overwrought by emotion that it was piteous to see, addressed the Great Council, begging them to turn to righteousness and offer their lives and substance in defence of the fatherland. Himself would give an example by sending his silver plate to the mint.

Venice and its Story

On April 27, 1509, Julius flung a bull of excommunication couched in savage terms against the Republic. The Ten forbade its publication and sent officers to take down any copies posted on churches or on the walls. They consulted learned canonists; drew up an appeal to a future council of the Church and sent emissaries to Rome who nailed a copy on the doors of St Peter's. The secular arm swiftly followed.

The League of Cambrai

Sanudo tells us that while he and two other Senators were examining a map of Italy painted on the walls of the Senate hall, a courier arrived with the news that the French had crossed the Adda, fallen on the fine army of the Republic at Agnadello and utterly routed it with a loss of four thousand in killed alone. Faces gathered gloom and despair. "Give me my cloak, wife," said Paolo Barbo, one of the most experienced of the fathers, "that I may go to the Senate, speak a couple of words and die." One disaster trod on the heels of another. Bergamo and Brescia fell, and before the month was ended nearly the whole of Lombardy was lost. Preparations were even made to defend and victual Venice. Envoys were sent to treat with the Kings of France and Spain. The Pope was tempted by an offer of partial restitution and help towards a crusade against the Turks. Meanwhile the Imperial Eagle swooped down from Trent. The Signory, by ceding Verona and Vicenza, hoped to conciliate the Emperor and save Padua. In vain were the civil commissioners with the army entreated to make a stand, "lest the whole of our cities surrender in an hour." Padua fell, and Treviso alone stood by the Republic. At bay, she now turned to the Sultan of Turkey and begged for money and men, especially men. If his Highness would advance them one hundred thousand ducats and would agree to buy no more cloth of the Genoese and Florentines, who only used his money to help a League that sought his hurt, the Signory would send him fifty thousand ducats' worth of cloth, and jewels worth fifty thousand more, as security. The Venetian consul at Alexandria was instructed to incite the Sultan of Egypt to ruin Genoese and Florentine commerce in his dominions, and the good offices of the Kings of England and Scotland were sought.

Venice and its Story

But the gloom was wearing away. One day in July two tall, mysterious, armed men were observed leaving Fusina in the gondola of the Ten. Arrived at Venice they remained closeted with the Ten and the Doge far into the night, then were rowed back whence they came. On the night of the 16th there was a hurrying to and fro of transports and armed vessels between the islands. The Doge's two sons and two hundred noble youths, fully armed, left for the mainland. The police boats of the Ten allowed no one to go out of Venice without permission. Next day Padua, disgusted by the insolence and exactions of the Imperialists, was won back for Venice amid shouts of Marco! Marco! e no Imperadore! before the laggard Emperor could reach the city. Sanudo remembered the 17th of July, for did he not buy a Hebrew Bible worth twenty ducats for a few pence as he was going home? The famous Captain-General, Francesco Gonzaga, Duke of Mantua, was surprised, captured and imprisoned in the Torresella of the Ducal Palace to the disgust of the Pope, who is said to have flung his biretta on the ground and cursed St Peter when he heard the news: two attacks by the Emperor were successfully resisted, and the foiled Cæsar retired to Vicenza in October with anger in his heart against the French. In February 1510, after long and tough negotiations, the Pope was given his prey and detached from the league, but at the price of a bitter abasement of Venice. Time had avenged the Empire. It was now the Queen of the Adriatic who, in the person of her ambassadors, bowed the neck before the enthroned Pope in the atrium of St Peter's, surrendered her ecclesiastical privileges, admitted the justice of the excommunication, craved pardon for having provoked it, and was at length absolved and bidden to do the penance of the seven churches. The Ten, however, entered in their register a protest of nullity, declaring that the conditions had been extracted from the Republic by violence. The Pope who, as he told Venice, had no pleasure in seeing the ruin of her State to the aggrandisement of the barbarians, now became her ally. Soon other cities, sickened by the atrocities of the invaders, returned to their allegiance, and by skilful playing of King against Emperor, and Pope against both, Venice was able to regain the bulk of her territory.

Decline of Venice

CHAPTER XI

Loss of Cyprus — Lepanto — Paolo Sarpi—Attack on the Ten—Loss of Crete—Temporary Reconquest of the Morea—Decadence—The End

“ Alas, alas that great city, that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls! . . . Alas, alas that great city, wherein were made rich all that had ships in the sea by reason of her costliness.”—The Revelation of St John the Divine.

WE may not here attempt to tread the maze of chicanery and violence which ended in the peace of Cambrai.¹ We are permitted to see a fighting Pope exhorting his soldiers and directing siege operations against an Italian city, and climbing by a scaling-ladder through the breach to take possession. In 1514 the Spaniards desolated the land up to the lagoons and levelled their cannon at Venice. In 1515 the encampments of four armies were exhausting and polluting Lombardy. In 1529 the English envoys, Carew and Sampson, who attended the coronation of the Emperor Charles V. at Bologna, wrote that during the whole of their journey of fifty miles from Vercelli to Pavia the country lay waste: no labourers were seen in the fields, and they only passed three poor women gathering wild grapes. Provisions were at famine prices, and people and children were dying of hunger. King, Popes, and Emperor died and their successors took up the unholy heritage of war and duplicity. Gaston de Foix, Bayard and other renowned chevaliers perished. In 1521 Charles V. came upon the scene, and in alliance with the great Medicean Pope, Leo X., swept the French and their Venetian allies out of Lombardy. In July 1523, when the power of France was waning, the Venetians made terms with the Emperor. They were suffered to retain their territory up to the Adda in return for an annual tribute of 250,000 ducats. Venice excused herself to Francis I. by professing solicitude for the peace of Christendom in view of the threatening attitude of the Sultan. Before the year was ended King and Emperor were competing for Venetian help in a renewed struggle for mastery. While the Republic was temporising, the Imperialists had descended on Lombardy, routed the French before Pavia and captured their King. "Nothing is left to me," wrote Francis, "but honour, and life which is safe,"¹ and proceeded to send his ring secretly to the Sultan and to grovel before Charles. The victorious Emperor brushed aside the subtleties of the Venetian ambassadors. "If you were to send all your lawyers," he cried, "you would not convince me. You must pay 80,000 ducats for the troops you failed to send to Pavia. You are rich: my expenses are heavy: you must help me."

¹ Our own Henry VIII. was an important piece in the game. “ You are all rascals ” (ribaldi), exclaimed Pope Julius II. to the English ambassador in 1510.

The Peace of Cambrai

After perjuring himself at the peace of Madrid, January 1526, the Cristianissimo returned to France, and in less than six weeks a "holy league" of France,

¹ The words of this oft-misquoted phrase are: "De toutes choses ne n'est demeuré que l'honneur et la vie qui est sauve."

Venice and its Story

Venice and the Papacy had been signed at Cognac for the "liberation" of Italy from the Imperialists. But Francis, whose moral fibre had been rotted by lechery, was no match for the virile genius of Charles, strong with the united resources of the Empire and of Spain in her greatness. The Emperor was soon again master of Italy; Rome was captured and sacked; Pope Clement VII. imprisoned. But the miserable condition of Italy and the news that the Turks were threatening Vienna disposed Charles to treat, and in July 1529 Margaret of Austria was once more at Cambrai negotiating on behalf of the Emperor with Louise of Savoy, who represented Francis.¹ Two adjacent houses were chosen and the party-wall pierced that the ladies might confer with absolute secrecy. In two months, while the Venetians were finessing, the "paix des dames" was concluded and Venice left to make the best terms she might with the Emperor. Francis had given way all along the line. "The peace of Cambrai," says Michelet, "was the moral annihilation of France in Europe." During the coronation festivities at Bologna the Emperor and the Pope found time to deal with the Venetians, who agreed to pay the balance of the annual tribute of 250,000 ducats due on the treaty of 1523; to restore Naples and the cities of Apulia to the Emperor; and to the Papacy Ravenna and Cervia, which they had seized during the Pope's imprisonment at Rome. Thanks to the impassable lagoons Venice preserved her capital inviolate, but her prestige and her military power were gone.

After the League of Cambrai a change comes over the Venetian temper. Patricians, instead of using their talent in commerce and discovery, chose to live on their invested capital and on the revenues of their mainland estates. The power of initiative was gone. In 1522, before Sebastian Cabot sailed for the New World, he contrived to meet Contarini, an emissary of the Ten, secretly at Valladolid, and told him he had no joy in selling his knowledge to the foreigner; that he had refused tempting offers from Cardinal Wolsey and was prepared to absolve himself from the King of Spain's service and spend his genius in the advancement of his fatherland. But Contarini talked of things possible and impossible, and success is to those who will achieve the impossible: the supreme opportunity of retrieving her mercantile position was lost to Venice for ever. Sadder still, when Loredano had called on the Senate for volunteers and patriotic gifts for Padua and Treviso, not a man stirred. Venice had lost faith in herself.

¹ Sir Thomas More was the English envoy.

Loss of Cyprus

In 1521 Leonardo Loredano died and was buried with more than usual pomp at S. Zanipolo. Antonio Grimani, the disgraced of Sapienza, who had redeemed himself by faithful service, reigned for two years and gave place to Andrea Gritti, a distinguished civil commissioner with the army during the wars. Between Gritti's death in 1539 and the election of Sebastian Venier, the hero of Lepanto, in 1577, there follows a line of Doges, Pietro Lando, Francesco Donato, Marc' Antonio Trevisano, Francesco Venier, Lorenzo and Girolamo Priuli, Pietro Loredano, Luigi Mocenigo, worthy magistrates all, but without distinction.

The wars had exhausted the State treasury and, in Priuli's apt phrase, all commercial houses were gravelled¹ by its exactions. Her Indian trade was withered, and the wealth of Venice was no more commensurate to the demands of a long naval war. Her military pride had been chastened by the rod of the Emperor, and a dread of Spanish arms and Spanish gold hung like a 'pall over men's minds. An era of subtle diplomacy begins, and the Council of the Ten, with its new instrument of the Inquisitors of State, tightens its grip upon the executive. Wave after wave of Ottoman fury surges against her Eastern possessions ; one by one they are engulfed. In 1535 she lost Egina, Paros and Syra ; in 1540, Malvasia and Nauplia. In 1570 Cyprus was marked out for conquest and the usual appeal to the Christian Powers was made. Spain and the Pope promised help. Zane, the Venetian commander, wasted his force waiting at Zara, then learned that the allies were at Corfù. He reached the island only to find the Spanish admiral without orders. Meanwhile the season had worn along and operations were judged inopportune. The whole island by this time was occupied by the Turks, Nicosia and Famagosta alone holding out. While the futile admirals were squabbling about plans the magnificent heroism of the garrisons and of the inhabitants was spent in vain ; the cities fell to the horrors of a Turkish pillage, and Marc' Antonio Brigadin, the Venetian governor of Famagosta, was treacherously flayed alive in the Piazza after having surrendered on terms to the enemy. Zane was recalled to Venice, and Sebastian Venier given command. A new alliance of Spain, the Papacy and Venice being concluded, at length on October 7, 1571, the allied fleets came upon the Turkish armament off Lepanto in the Gulf of Corinth. The Spanish admiral, Don John of Austria, was in supreme command ; Venier led the Venetians ; Marc' Antonio Colonna the Papalists.

¹ S'erano arenati tutti i negotii.

Venice and its Story

It was a calm sunny morning. The line of the allied fleets was four miles in extent ; the two armaments were a mass of glittering steel as the rays of the sun smote on the helmets, breastplates and shields, bright as polished mirrors. The banners of gold, and tall galley lamps, were resplendent in many colours. A beautiful, yet an awful spectacle. The Venetian flagship was fiercely assailed. Venier, spite of his seventy-five years, was seen, sword in hand, pressing to the thick of the fight, heartening his men and with invincible courage striking down his enemies, so that he wrought deeds beyond the belief of man. We cannot here linger on the vicissitudes of the struggle. Scenes of comic relief were not absent from the tragedy. Some Turks, their arms of offence failing, seized upon a quantity of oranges and lemons and threw them at their enemies, who with mocking laughter cast them back. At length after five hours of savage fighting, the Turks were scoured off the seas. The allied and victorious admirals met, embraced each other speechless from emotion; and as the venerable Venier and the youthful Don John of Austria stood clasped in each other's arms shedding tears of joy, the eyes of even the most hardened of sea-dogs were moist with tears. Some 30,000 Turks are said to have perished; 3486 prisoners were divided among the victors as slaves; 94 ships were burned; 130 ships and 356 guns captured; 15,000 Christian slaves set at liberty. The allies lost heavily: 8000 men were slain including 25 Venetian nobles.¹ Among the Spanish was Cervantes, who lost an arm in the engagement.

Lepanto

As day broke on October 18th, a galley was seen sailing up to Lido trailing the Turkish colours at her stern, a pile of turbans on her deck. Amid the booming of the guns could be heard cries of "Victory! victory!" The reaction from the gloom of Cyprian news was tremendous. A frenzy of joy possessed the people; shops were shut per la morte de' Turchi; the streets from the Rialto bridge to the Merceria were covered with a firmament of blue cloth spangled with stars of gold; a pyramid of Turkish spoils stood on the Piazza, which was gay with scarlet cloth, tapestry and pictures. Four days' rejoicings celebrated the triumph of the Cross. But to Venice the battle of Lepanto was a sterile victory. Dynastic jealousy in Spain and the old suspicion of Venice, which still clung to the allies, permitted the Turks to recover from the blow, and in March 1573 she agreed to purchase a separate peace at the cost of an indemnity of 300,000 ducats and a threefold increase of the tribute for Zante. The fair Island of Cyprus was lost for ever. "Was it the Turks who were the victors at Lepanto?" asks Romanin.

¹ Girolamo Diedo's story of the famous battle is published in the Biblioteca Diamante, for twenty centesimi (twopence).

Venice and its Story

On Doge Venier was conferred the consecrated golden rose, a supreme token of papal favour, but during the seventy years' peace from Lepanto to the outbreak of the fifth Turkish war, the indictment at Rome against the refractory children of the lagoons increased in gravity, and in the beginning of the seventeenth century the Papacy determined to force them to yield to discipline. The Venetians were a stubborn folk when their national dignity was threatened by Rome. "These Signori of the Senate," said Paul IV. to the Venetian ambassador, "are tough fellows and take a lot of cooking" (non sono molto buoni da cuocer). In 1527, when the Papacy was under the heel of Charles V., the Republic had reasserted her rights to nominate to ecclesiastical offices. Disputes as to the taxation of Church property, the right of the Pope to inspect the monasteries, the right of the Republic to try criminous clerics, exacerbated the situation until at length Gregory XIII. declared in 1581 that he would no longer consent to be Pope everywhere but in Venice, and sent his nuncio to make a visitation of the Venetian monasteries: the Republic refused permission, and the conflict called of the Interdetto began. But the fight between Italian Popes and Italian sovereigns, even in our own times, has generally been a comedy played for the mystification of Transalpine powers and all ended in compromise. The Signory appointed the Bishop of Verona as the nuncio's colleague, and persuaded itself that the nuncio went with the Bishop; the Pope satisfied his dignity by claiming that the Bishop went with the nuncio.

In 1605 the Spanish party, ever the evil genius of the Sacred College, re-opened the quarrel. The Republic had refused to send their nominee to the Patriarchate of Venice for examination to Rome, and had tried and convicted two clerics on the mainland for criminal offences. On Christmas Day a brief from Pope Paul V. was delivered to the Signory threatening excommunication if they did not submit in the matter of the taxation of ecclesiastical estates. The Republic engaged the learned Augustinian friar Paolo Sarpi as their adviser at a salary of two hundred ducats and prepared for the struggle. In February 1606, a second brief followed on the matter of the convicted clerics; the Republic expressed her devotion to the Catholic Faith, but firmly though respectfully declined to surrender her ancient rights and privileges. On April 16th, the Republic was given twenty-four days to submit under pain of interdict. Venice calmly waited. In due time the bull of excommunication¹ and interdict was delivered: the Signory forbade its publication and ordered the clergy to continue their functions as usual. Some of the regular clergy who disobeyed were expelled. Sarpi advised the Republic with excellent prudence and wisdom, and became in the eyes of Europe one of the greatest protagonists of national liberty against papal aggression. A Spanish army having been mobilised on the Milanese frontier, Sir Henry Wotton, the English ambassador, suggested an alliance of Venice with England, France, the Grisons, and the German Protestant princes, but the Republic was deaf on that side. She declared to the Pope that the Venetians were as good Catholics as himself, but that as Church property enjoyed the protection of the State, it must share its burdens, and that criminals, whether lay or cleric, must be equally subject to the laws of the land. Time wore on. Spain, humbled by the defeat of her Armada and the revolt of the Netherlands, was afraid to strike; the obsolete ghostly artillery of Rome failed to act; and the secular clergy stood loyally by the Republic. The Papacy reverted to her habitual policy of compromise; the services of Henry IV. of France as mediator were accepted and a solemn comedy was played. The Signory agreed to surrender the incriminated clerics, without prejudice, to the French ambassador; the Pope agreed to withdraw informally the bull of excommunication and interdict. The Republic continued to nominate for Church offices and try clerical delinquents as before.

¹ By the interdict the Venetian clergy were forbidden to exercise any of the functions of the Church. By excommunication the Government and citizens of Venice were excluded from the communion of the faithful.

But the Spanish fanatics at the Vatican never forgave the Venetian friar for his share in their discomfiture. On October 25, 1607, three ruffians fell upon him as he was crossing the S. Fosca Bridge,¹ stabbed him, then left him for dead, and escaped to Papal territory. Sarpi, however, recovered. The surgeon who was dressing his wounds remarked on their jagged, ¹Sir Henry Wotton told the Doge that the blow was struck by a Scotchman, who used to hang about the English embassy.

inartistic nature. "Ah!" replied the witty friar, "agnosco stylum curie romane." On his recovery the Signory gave him a pension of six hundred ducats and a house near the Piazza, where the great patriot-scholar devoted the remainder of his life to literature and science.¹ Two further attempts were made to assassinate him, in 1609 and 1610. He spent his last lucid moments in the service of the Republic, advising the Senate in three important questions in 1623 as he lay on his death-bed; but his mind soon began to wander. "It is growing late," he murmured, "I must hasten to St Mark's for I have much to do." His last words were a prayer for his country. "Esto perpetua."

The university of "Fair Padua, nursery of the Arts," became under Venetian auspices the most famous and most honoured centre of learning in Europe. Liberal salaries and an atmosphere of intellectual freedom drew an array of the most eminent teachers in Christendom. Fallopius, in physiology and medicine; Galileo, in astronomy and mathematics, were names that crowded its halls with eager students. As many as eighteen thousand of all nations were gathered there daily in the sixteenth century. During his professorship of twenty years, Galileo invented the thermometer and the telescope. Tasso studied, and our own Harvey (Italians claim) learned the secret of the circulation of the blood there. The Earl of Arundel sent his two sons in 1622 to drink of its springs. The Admirable Crichton having called on one of the Aldi in 1580, was introduced to the Signory.

¹The writer of the "History of the Council of Trent" is placed by Ranke second only to Macchiavelli as an Italian historian. Mazzini, in an essay published in vol. iv. of his collected works, claims that Sarpi was the real discoverer of the circulation of the blood.

Venice and its Story

and improvised before the Senate a Latin oration of "most rare and singular power." The Fathers voted the impecunious youth one hundred crowns as a courteous recognition of his marvellous powers, and sent him to Padua with a warm introduction.

To Sebastian Venier succeeded Doge Nicolo da Ponte in 1577, a worthy scholar and student of theology, who had represented the Republic at the Council of Trent. At his death, in 1585, Pasquale Cigogna, descended from an apothecary ennobled after the war of Chioggia, was preferred to the ducal office. Cigogna saw the erection of the new stone Rialto bridge and, after ten years' peaceful reign, was followed by a popular and lavish prince, Marino Grimani, whose consort was exceptionally honoured by a gorgeous coronation ceremony. Grimani died on Christmas Day 1605, the very evening of the delivery of the first papal brief, and Leonardo Donato was chosen to open the document, and to preside over the conflict with the Spanish papalists at Rome.¹ When he died in 1612, weird stories were whispered by fanatics of shrieks and cries heard from his chamber as the Evil One bore him away.

During the short reigns of Marc' Antonio Memmo, Giovanni Bembo, Nicolo Donato, and Antonio Priuli, the Ten had been accumulating evidence of a vast conspiracy to seize the city, concerted by the Spanish Viceroy of Naples and the Marquis of Bedmar, the Spanish ambassador at Venice. On May 12, 1618, three Frenchmen in Venetian pay were arrested,

¹ It is related that Leonardo when ambassador at Rome was one day conversing with the future Paul V. concerning the rights of the Republic over ecclesiastics. "If I were Pope," said the latter, "I could excommunicate you at the first opportunity," to whom Leonardo replied: "and, if I were Doge I would laugh at it."

The Spanish Plot

strangled, and hung head downwards between the red columns, and orders were sent to the fleet to despatch three others: the plot had been divulged by two of the conspirators, and in all some three hundred persons of various nationalities, including many poor Venetian patricians, were implicated, and paid the penalty with their lives. The Spanish ambassador was for a time in danger, and under guard. He protested his innocence of the plot, as did his colleague of France. Both, however, soon sought a change of air. Two years were spent in tracing the ramifications of the plot, and in 1620 a senator, Giambattista Bragadin, was found to be in Spanish pay, and hanged between the columns.

In 1622 the atmosphere of dread and suspicion which encompassed the State, so dulled the perceptions of the Ten that a grave miscarriage of justice was laid to their charge. In 1618 Antonio Foscarini, a noble of high family and Venetian ambassador at London, was accused by Mascorno, a disaffected member of his staff, of licentiousness, blasphemy and treason. Foscarini was recalled, arrested by the Ten and, after a long trial, acquitted, but kept under surveillance. In 1622, as he was leaving the Senate, a cloak was flung over him, and he was hurried off to prison. His accuser, who had been sentenced to two years' detention in a fortress, had, on his release, fabricated some documents which the tribunal deemed conclusive. Foscarini was declared guilty of corresponding secretly with Spain and the Emperor, strangled in prison, and his dead body hung by the leg between the red columns. As he had been an occasional visitor at Casa Mocenigo, where Lady Arundel resided, she was suspected also; but Sir Henry Wotton prompted her to clear herself by asking an audience of the Doge. This she did, and was allowed to make a statement in the Senate, the only woman who ever addressed that Assembly. She was exonerated, and a present of sweetmeats and wax offered to conciliate her. Four months later poor Foscarini's innocence was entirely proved, and two of his accusers were put to death; the family was restored to honour, and his remains were dug up and buried in the Frari with great splendour and pomp. His bust may still be seen in the church of S. Eustacchio (S. Stae) near the old Foscarini Palace.

Venice and its Story

Doge Priuli died shortly after the Foscarini tragedy. The brief reign of Francesco Contarini followed, and Giovanni Cornaro was chosen to fill the ducal office in 1624. The shock of Foscarini's judicial murder had given a rallying cry to the poorer nobles in the Great Council, who were jealous of the power of the Ten and the monopoly of office by the more influential patricians; and Renier Zeno, a patrician, fearless and incorruptible—himself an ex-capo of the Ten—led an attack on the tribunal. Banished for a year, he did but return with added popularity, and forced himself again on the Ten as one of the Capi. He used his power to accuse the Doge of nepotism, and his Serenity was forced to cancel certain family appointments. Zeno, driving his advantage further, came into conflict with his colleagues of the Ten and, leaning on the majority of the Great Council, emerged triumphant. Shortly after, while standing at the Porta della Carta, he was attacked by five persons and stabbed. The Doge's son and certain alleged accomplices were denounced to the Ten, whose laggard justice, however, made flight easy. Again appointed one of the Ten, Zeno, on his recovery, renewed the struggle with increased vigour and, after a stormy scene in the Great Council, during which he came to high words with the Doge, the stout reformer was ordered to keep his house, and report himself to the Ten within three days. Ignoring the summons, he was fined two thousand ducats and banished, whereupon the Great Council quashed the sentence, and ordered it to be blotted out of the records of the Ten. At length Zeno's party succeeded in carrying a motion for a committee of inquiry into the constitution of the Ten, but the four years' bitter conflict ended in a virtual triumph for the tribunal, whose powers of criminal jurisdiction over the nobles were reaffirmed, though it had to submit to a modified capitulary.

Attack on the Ten

During the latter half of the seventeenth century the power of Venice was declining to its setting in an aureole of glory. In 1644, Crete, the oldest and last remaining of her great possessions in the East, was marked for conquest, and, like an old warrior who takes down his armour and girds himself to make a last stand against his hereditary foes, Venice prepared to resist the Turk to the uttermost. The old heroic times seem to return as we watch the quarter of a century's struggle, but our admiration is touched with pathos, for we know that the dice are loaded against Venice. A Turkish pilgrim fleet for Mecca had been pillaged by the Knights of Malta, and the pious buccaneers had landed at Crete for provisions. This was pretext enough for hostilities. In 1645 a huge armament left the Bosphorus, ostensibly for Malta, actually for the conquest of Crete. Canea quickly fell, and the Turks promised themselves an easy occupation. But twenty-four years of fierce and exhausting fighting ensued before the Crescent floated over the island.

Seven million ducats were quickly raised in Venice by the sale of patents of nobility. By a marvellous re-birth of naval energy and capacity, her fleet was reorganised and spread terror along the Dardanelles.

Venice and its Story

The Venetian Captain-General, Lazzaro Mocenigo, determined to force the passage and attack Constantinople, but a well-aimed shell fired his ship, and he was killed. Francesco Morosini, appointed his successor, won the admiration of Europe by his twenty-two years' defence of Candia. Inspired by his heroism, companies of Flemish and French volunteers, eager and impetuous, joined him, but their enthusiasm was soon spent and, impatient of the long vigils and toils of the war, they left the Venetians to fight alone. Morosini did not save Crete, but he extorted an honourable peace. No indemnity was paid, and the Venetian garrison marched proudly out of Candia unsubdued.¹ Four thousand Candiots who opted for Venice were settled in Istria, where traces of their language and customs are said still to survive. Suda and other fortresses remained in the hands of the Venetians. To the Pope the result seemed almost incredible.

In 1684 Venice was invited to join the Emperor and the King of Poland in a league against the Turks. The Cretan war had cost her one hundred and twenty-six million ducats, and she felt too exhausted to run with the horsemen again. But bolder counsels prevailed. Morosini was despatched with an army, and ably seconded by Koningsmark, the great Swedish mercenary, overran the Morea, captured Coron, Sparta and Athens, which last was won at the price of the ruin of the Parthenon, the Turkish powder magazine there having been exploded by a Venetian shell. Morosini returned in triumph, bringing the Greek lions, which still stand in front of the Arsenal. He was made Doge in 1688, the coronation being deferred that he might return to Greece. Vast designs of the recapture of Negropont, even of Crete, lured him on, but ill-health soon necessitated his return, only, however, to be again entreated to take up the command and retrieve the blunders of an incompetent Captain-General. The veteran Doge and captain for the last time sailed from Venice amid scenes that recalled the great crusading times of old. After some successes at Corinth he went to winter at Nauplia, where he died on January 9, 1694. A tomb in S. Stefano and a triumphal arch in the Sala dello Scrutinio of the Ducal Palace still bear witness to the fame of the greatest of the later Doges. But Venice was too poor and too feeble to retain her conquests. During a short campaign in 1715 she lost the whole of the Morea, and by the treaty of Passarovitch in 1717 all that was left of her vast empire in the East were a few fortresses in Dalmatia, Albania and Herzegovina. The treaty of 1717 bore her last signature as a European Power.

¹ So indelible an impression was made by the long struggle on the popular mind, that the locution, una vera guerra di Candia, to express bitter personal enmity was common in Byron's time.

Loss of the Morea

The procession of Doges that stretches from Giovanni Cornaro, the opponent of Renier Zeno, to the fall of the Republic contains but one name of historic significance—Francesco Morosini. Marco Foscarini, elected in 1762, a descendant of the ill-fated Antonio Foscarini, is known to students as the author of a "History of Venetian Literature," and Ludovico Manin has the unhappy distinction of closing the line for ever. Through all the vicissitudes of foreign affairs, the decadence of trade, the fear corroding at her statesmen's hearts, the social and ceremonial life of Venice waxed rather than waned in pomp and splendour. The recurring ravages of plague periodically purged her pride and luxury, and of all the great cities of Europe, Venice bears the deepest traces of the passages of the destroying angel. In her annals no less than seventy visitations are recorded. Two great churches, the Redentore founded in 1575 and the Salute in 1630, are votive offerings to Heaven for salvation from the scourge; her greatest scuola is dedicated to the chief plague saint, St Roch. Indeed in all her churches the figures of the plague saints, St Roch, St Job, St Sebastian, have a sad pre-eminence. But the danger past, the lesson faded from her memory, and the traditional magnificence shone forth. She became again—

Venice and its Story

“The pleasant place of all festivity;
The Revel of the earth; the Masque of Italy.”

Sanudo gives a list of nineteen great annual pageants, and after his time others were added. Besides these official festivals great patrician weddings or the visits of foreign potentates were the occasions of stately pomp and joyous revels. The loan of the Bucintoro and a subsidy of five hundred ducats were voted to the Calza to entertain the Duke of Milan in 1530. On this occasion a bellissima colazion (luncheon) was prepared, says Sanudo, but so ill-arranged that the Milanese nobles got nothing, while some Venetian Senators filled the sleeves of their robes with sweetmeats to the shame of those who saw it. At the anniversaries of the greater scuole, each guild vied with the other to excel in splendour. Never before nor since was such magnificence. The greatest artists of the day were commissioned to execute the decorations. The Bucintoro was carved by the best sculptors: Palladio, Titian and Tintoretto designed and decorated triumphal arches. Vasari, at the instance of his dear friend the Aretino, was invited by the Guild of the Calza to Venice in 1541, and designed for them a most sumptuous and magnificent pageant,¹ and painted the scenery for one of the Aretino's comedies.

¹ Described in detail in the “Life of Cristofano Gherardi.”

Decadence

Venice surpassed herself in the reception given to Henry III. on his way from Poland to assume the crown of France in 1574. The young king was met at Malghera—the modern traveller will pass a fort erected there as he nears the railway bridge—by sixty Senators in gondolas covered with velvet, oriental carpets and cloth of gold, and was ferried to Murano, where he passed the night in one of the rich palaces with delicious gardens for which the island was then noted. Sixty halberdiers clothed in silk of azure and gold were his bodyguard: forty noble youths of the Calza were his attendants. On the morrow amid salvos of artillery he embarked for Venice in a great galley manned by four hundred Slavonians clothed in yellow and turquoise taffety, followed by an immense train of galleys and gondolas decorated with carpets and tapestry, with banners and flags waving in the breeze. The procession of the trade guilds, formed of a hundred and seventy boats resplendent with crimson and silver and gold, was a dazzling pageant. The glass-workers excelled in splendour and invention. A marine monster, in whose body could be seen a furnace, and craftsmen making most beautiful crystal vases, led their section, breathing flames from his mouth. Then followed a boat in the shape of a great dolphin bestridden by Neptune; on the poop stood two winged angels to waft it along; four river gods personifying the Brenta, the Adige, the Po and the Piove plied the oars. At S. Nicolo del Lido, Palladio had constructed a triumphal arch adorned with statues of Victory, Peace, Faith and Justice, and with ten paintings by Titian and Tintoretto portraying events in the King's life. His Majesty lodged in the Palazzo Foscari from which an opening was made into the Palazzo Giustiniani to accommodate his suite, the whole being furnished with oriental magnificence. At a State ball given in the hall of the Great Council, two hundred gorgeously attired ladies were present, glittering with jewels and precious stones. The Sala dello Scrutinio was made into a supper-room where twelve hundred and sixty plates of sweetmeats in the forms of griffins, ships, nymphs, deities, etc., tempted the palates of the guests. Regattas, serenades and jousts made the whole visit seem a dream of enchantment to the King.

Venice and its Story

As trade languished and the population diminished, public shows increased in splendour. The sum expended at the election and coronation of the last Doge—forty-seven thousand, two hundred and ninety-eight ducats, was beyond all precedent. Venice was still the temple of pleasure. All the arts subservient to the luxury and vices of the rich flourished in rankest exuberance despite the efforts of the Ten to cleanse public morals and to enforce sumptuary laws. The excessive importance too of the stage and of its tinselled heroes and tawdry queens, was an infallible symptom of a decadent nation. The time came in the eighteenth century when the State was torn by the petty jealousies and vanities of a playwright and an actress, and when public appointments were controlled by the subtle influence of the boudoir and the drawing-room, and an ambitious and beautiful society lady was the central figure of Venetian life.¹ It was the time of the fatuous masquerades and futile pomposities portrayed for us by Longhi, when the card table, the coffee house and the play were the absorbing interest of Venetian minds. By a tardy deathbed repentance, the Ridotto, the famous gambling hall of Venice, was suppressed in 1775, and other measures were discussed to cleanse public life. But already so immedicable were the ills of the state that it was proposed to seek for new members of the Great Council among provincial families lest the requisite number of voters should be lacking owing to the immorality and paucity of marriages among the old nobility. Yet before the Queen of the Adriatic sinks into the deep night of subjection to Austria to rise again as a province of a free and united Italy,¹ a faint hue of naval splendour lights up the horizon. Soon after Goethe's arrival in Venice in 1786 he ascended St Mark's tower and under the bright noon-day sun saw a fleet of galleys and frigates lying off Lido: they were reinforcements for Tunis, where the last of the great Venetians, Angelo Emo, was fighting the Algerian pirates. Emo humbled the Bey of Tunis, cleared the seas, and died at Malta in 1792. Five years later Napoleon marched his battalions towards the lagoons and before the mere breath of his coming the Republic of Venice crumbled into dust. On May 16, 1797, for the first time in a thousand years the Realtine islands were trodden by the foot of a conqueror, and the hundred and twentieth Doge of Venice, handing his biretta to an attendant, said: "Take it away, we shall not need it again."

¹ See Introduction to the Memoirs of Carlo Gozzi by J. A. Symonds, 1889.

Decadence

¹ The incidents of this, a nobler chapter than any of the foregoing in Venetian history, may be read in Mr Bolton King's "History of United Italy," 2 vols., Nisbet, 1899.

CHAPTER XII

THE FINE ARTS AT VENICE

Masons—Mosaicists—Painters— Glass-workers—Printers

Some prefer the pure design :
Give me my gorge of colour, glut of gold
In a glory round the Virgin made for me !
Titian's the man, not monk Angelico
Who traces you some timid chalky ghost
That turns the church into a charnel.

—Browning.

OWING to the absorption of her energies in commerce and the eastern trend of her interests and activities Venice lagged behind the Tuscan masters in the practice of the finer arts. Her earliest craftsmen were Byzantines, and St Mark's was modelled on the Church of the Holy Apostles at Constantinople and adorned by mosaicists from the same city. They were artists, rich in invention, and endowed with a perfect sense of beauty in design : the reliefs imbedded in the façades of St Mark's and in scores of houses about the city of Venice bear ample testimony to their greatness. In the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, however, Byzantine art had become degenerate, and traces of native Venetian sculpture as early as the twelfth century have been argued from the rude carvings on the pillars which support the tabernacle of the high altar of St Mark's. But it is not till we reach the masters of the characteristic Gothic, Transitional, and early Renaissance styles, that the important place due to Venice in the history of the mason's craft is made clear. The influence of Tuscan sculptors in Venetian architecture is beyond dispute. Vasari's qualified statement that Andrea Pisano worked at Venice has been confirmed,¹ though the assertion that he carved some figures on the façade of St Mark's, and designed the Arsenal for Doge Pietro Gradenigo is open to doubt. Nicolo Lamberti, a Tuscan, worked on the decorations of the main archivolt of St Mark's; Florentine artists carved some of the best figures and capitals in the façades of the Ducal Palace, and wrought one of the finest tombs in S. Zanipolo; Michelozzo is said to have built the Medici library at the monastery of St Giorgio Maggiore; and the design so often met with in monumental sculpture in Venice—two angels, one at either end of the tomb drawing aside a curtain to display the recumbent effigy of the dead—was invented by a Florentine, Arnolfo di Cambio.

Masons

Of the earliest Venetian masters little is known. Pietro Basseggio and Filippo Calendario are responsible for the earlier fourteenth century work on the Ducal Palace. Jacobello, and his son Piero, delle Massegne (*dei Macigni*²), thus called because of their craft, were working in Venice towards the close of the fourteenth century; the statues of the apostles, the Virgin, and St Mark over the choir-screen, and others in the choir chapels of St Mark's, the main portal of S. Stefano, the beautiful lunette over the Friar's door at the Frari, and the tomb of Simone Dandolo in the same church are excellent examples of their style. How much of the sculpture on the façades of the Ducal Palace was due to the Buoni it is difficult to say.¹ The Buoni seem to have comprised the father, Giovanni; his son, Bartolomeo, who was probably the Bartolomeo sent by the Signory with Gentile Bellini to Constantinople; and a certain Pantaleone Buon, once believed to be another son, but actually of no kinship with him. To Bartolomeo, sometimes known as Bartolomeo della Madonna dell' Orto, is ascribed the Porta della Carta of the Ducal Palace (1439) on the strength of an inscription opera Bartholomei. The reliefs of the Lion and of Doge Foscari are modern reproductions, but the original head of Foscari, preserved in the palace still, bears witness to the genius of this great craftsman. He must not be confounded with another Bartolomeo Buon, known as Master Bartolomeo of Bergamo, also claimed as a native of Venice, who in 1493 superintended the painters in the Ducal Palace, and in 1500 presided over the works designed by Pietro Lombardo for the Procuratie Vecchie.

¹ See note by Giovanni Maselli to Vasari, 1832-1838.

² Macigno is a hard sandstone.

Certain craftsmen dubbed Riccio or Rizzo (Curly pate) now claim attention. Their identity is much canvassed by Italian authorities. Before the use of surnames became common it was the custom to refer to contemporaries by their Christian or nicknames to the confusion of biographers and critics. We meet with three Ricci who are stated to have worked at ¹ Mr Perkins attributes nearly the whole of these sculptures, so diverse in style from Bartolomeo's Porta della Carta, to Calendario, and claims that the identity of idea and completeness of the whole series prove that they were the conception of one mind. The repetition in the later work on the W. façade of the designs of six capitals on the S., he believes to be due, not to any failure of invention on the part of the later artists, as stated by Ruskin, but rather to a creditable desire not to disturb the harmony of the whole. Authorities are hopelessly at variance as to the date of these façade sculptures.

Masons

Venice. (1) Andrea Riccio of Padua living about 1400, who is said by Vasari to have executed the statues of Adam and Eve to be referred to presently.

(2) Antonio Riccio or Rizzo, sometimes called Briosco, of Verona, who, according to Zanotto¹ was employed by the Republic to assist Antonio Loredan at the siege of Scutari.² He returned, after most effective service, covered with wounds; the grateful Senate voted him and his sons in 1483 a pension for twenty years, and appointed him architect of the Ducal Palace after the fire in the same year, authorising him to draw for funds on the salt office. To him, and not to Andrea, are ascribed by Zanotto the masterly statues of Adam and Eve in the niches opposite the Scala dei Giganti, the Scala itself, the adjoining façade in the cortile, and the rio façade. These on Francesco Sansovino's authority are more commonly attributed to Antonio Bregno (also called Il Riccio or Rizzo). He is said to have been a contemporary of Scarpagnino (Antonio Scarpagni), who, in 1514, submitted designs for the new stone Rialto Bridge, and succeeded Sante Lombardo in the erection of the Scuola di S. Rocco. Bregno, however, is a mysterious figure who, so Zanotto declares, either never existed or was none other than Riccio the Veronese. It is clear, however, from the annals of Malipiero that in 1498, one Antonio Riccio or Rizzo, architect of the Ducal Palace, after spending 80,000 ducats left the work not half done; that he had by forged vouchers defrauded the Salt Office to the extent of 12,000 ducats, and bolted to Foligno, where he soon died.¹

¹ Il Palazzo Ducale di Venezia.

² In early times architecture, sculpture, and engineering were branches of the same profession. Michael Angelo worked at San Miniato on the fortifications of Florence; Da Vinci at the Castello of Milan for Il Moro, and in Romagna for Cesare Borgia as a military engineer.

Venice and its Story

To the family of Venetian masters (or, according to some authorities, Lombard immigrants from Carona on Lake Lugano), known as the Lombardi, are due the most beautiful and original of the early renaissance architecture and sculpture in Venice. Pietro Lombardo, said to have been the son of a mason named Martino, was working in Venice in 1462. In 1481 his design for the Church of the Miracoli was chosen, and the building was erected under his superintendence. When Antonio Riccio fled from Venice, Pietro succeeded him at the Ducal Palace, with a salary of 120 ducats, and for twelve years was the official architect of the Republic. Among his works in Venice are the fine statues of St Anthony and three other saints in S. Stefano. The altars of St James and St Paul in St Mark's are also attributed to him, but he is probably best known as the sculptor of the Dante Memorial at Ravenna, which he was commissioned to execute by the Venetian Governor of the city. Antonio Lombardi, born before 1453, assisted his father at the Miracoli and on the tomb of Doge Pietro Mocenigo at S. Zanipolo. He collaborated with Aless. Leopardi on the bronze work in the Cappella Zen at St Mark's, and the statue of St Thomas Aquinas in S. Zanipolo is attributed to him. Martino Lombardo, whose relationship is unknown, was architect of the Scuola di S. Marco after 1485, and was believed by Temanza to have built S. Zaccaria.² Moro Lombardo, probably a son of Martino, assisted his father in the Scuola di S. Marco. In 1524-7, Giulio Lombardo, probably son of Pietro, was acting in an advisory capacity to Sante or Zante Lombardo, a son of Pietro, born 1504, in the works at the Scuola di S. Rocco. The Church of S. Giorgio dei Greci ascribed to Sansovino is now attributed to Sante and one named Chiona. Tullio Lombardo (1453-1537) was the son of Pietro, and the best sculptor of the family. Beside his work in the interior of the Miracoli, he executed the reliefs on the façade of the Scuola di S. Marco and the monument to Giovanni Mocenigo in S. Zanipolo. He also collaborated with Leopardi on the Vendramin tomb in the same church. To the Lombardi school we owe the beautiful Cappella Giustiniano at S. Francesco della Vigna, and a fine relief in S. Giovanni Grisostomo (Coronation of the Virgin and the Twelve Apostles).

¹ Arch. Stor. Ital., vol. vii. p. 674.

² Now assigned to Marc' Antonio Gambello and Moro Coducci.

Masons

Aless. Leopardi (1450-1521) raised Venetian sculpture to its highest plane of technical perfection. The Venetian artist was peculiarly privileged. Unlike the Pisani and other Tuscans who drew their inspiration from mediæval French sculpture or from Roman antiques, he was able to draw from the fountain-head. The lands of Hellas were subject to the Republic, and, doubtless, many a young apprentice spent his Wanderjahre there. Enthusiasm gave insight, and both in technique and design we seem to trace in Tullio Lombardo and Leopardi the influence of Greek originals. To Leopardi are due the Vendramin tomb in S. Zanipolo, the finest of renaissance sepulchral monuments, and the completion of the Colleoni statue. The three magnificent bronze bases for the flagstaves in front of St Mark's were wrought by him. But soon aversion from the study of nature, and the growing pomp of private and public life reacted on the renaissance artists; their work became mannered and feeble; they lost individuality and character. They found in Venice a rich field for exploitation. She was not only the wealthiest, she was the most tranquil of European states. Imperial in policy, oligarchical in government, she sought by the splendour of the arts and by magnificent pageantry to feed the pride of her nobles, and lay any spirit of political freedom that might have survived in her people.

Venice and its Story

A giant among the sixteenth century masters who were attracted to Venice was the bosom friend and colleague of Andrea del Sarto, Jacopo Tatti (1477-1570) of Florence, known as Sansovino, from his intimate association with his master, Andrea Contucci, of Monte Sansovino. Jacopo, while sketching from the antique at Rome, attracted the notice of Bramante, who was charmed by a wax model of the Laocoon executed by the young student, and judged by Raphael to be the best of four others; it was cast in bronze, and subsequently came into the possession of Cardinal Grimani, who left it in his will to the Signory. In 1527, after the sack of Rome, Jacopo came to Venice, and was employed by Doge Gritti to strengthen the domes of St Mark's. He did his work so amazingly well (fece stupire Venezia, says Vasari), that he was appointed in 1529 chief architect, with a house and a salary of 80 ducats, afterwards increased to 180. In 1536 the Senate decreed the erection of a library to contain the books left to the Republic by Petrarch and Cardinal Bassarione. Sansovino was charged with the building, now known as the Libreria Vecchia, and esteemed by Palladio to be probably the richest and most ornate edifice erected since the time of the ancients. The Signory were royal pay-masters, but intolerant of bad work; and when, on December 18, 1545, part of the vaulting fell, Sansovino was imprisoned, fined a thousand crowns, and deprived of his office. He succeeded, however, in proving his innocence, was released and compensated by a solatium of 900 crowns, and restored to his former position. Sansovino's work, however, ends at the sixteenth arch from the Campanile corner; twelve years after his death it was finished by Scamozzi. Jacopo was a lovable artist, ever ready with help and counsel to those who entreated him; the friend of Titian and of every great man of his time; in youth a most winning personality; in age venerable and alert. At ninety-three, if we may trust Vasari, his eyes were undimmed, and he bore himself erect as ever. Among other works by him may be specified the beautiful loggia destroyed by the collapse of the Campanile, in July 1902; the bronze doors leading to the sacristy of St Mark's, on which he is said to have worked during a period of twenty years; the six bronze reliefs in the choir of the same church; the colossal statues of Mars and Neptune at the top of the giants' staircase, and the Scala d'Oro in the Ducal Palace; and many mansions and churches, the choicest of which, S. Geminiano, no longer exists.

Masons

Of all Sansovino's followers, Girolamo Campagna is the most talented. Good examples of his works are the bronze statues of St Mark and St Francis in the Redentore, the small statues of St Francis and St Clare in the Miracoli, and the reclining figure of Doge Cicogna (1595) in the Gesuiti. Alessandria Vittoria of Trent (1525-1603) was a facile artist. Among his works are the statue of St Sebastian in S. Salvatore, the fine bust of Cardinal Gasparo in the Madonna dell' Orto, the ruined chapel of the Rosary in S. Zanipolo, and the artist's own tomb in S. Zaccaria. Michele Sammichele (1484-1559), the great Veronese master and famous military engineer, was employed by the Republic between 1530 and 1550, and designed the great fortifications in the mainland provinces, on the Dalmatian coast, at Corfù, Cyprus and Romania, many of which remain to this day. On his return to Venice, he constructed the magnificent fortress of S. Andrea del Lido, a stupendous work, now threatened with ruin, owing to erosion by currents set up by the new dykes near the Lido. The Palazzo Grimani on the Grand Canal, the Ponte del Bucintoro at the Arsenal are by this master, whose architecture so dominates Verona. He was an earnest, God-fearing man, of grave, subdued, yet cheerful disposition, generous and tender-hearted.

Venice and its Story

The once famous, but now too depreciated, Andrea Palladio of Vicenza (1518-80), came to Venice about 1550, where he designed, among other edifices, the noble cloister of the Carità; the refectory, cloister and church¹ of S. Giorgio Maggiore (1556-79); and the Redentore, the greatest of his ecclesiastical buildings (1578-80). The interiors of Palladio's churches, by their austere beauty, their symmetry and proportion, are among the greatest achievements of the later Renaissance. He had an extraordinary vogue in Venice, and designed many patrician villas on the mainland.

Vicenzo Scamozzi of Vicenza (1552-1616) was attracted to Venice by the fame of Sansovino and Palladio, under whom he studied; like his masters he spent much time at Rome. On returning to Venice he was employed to complete the Libreria Vecchia in 1582, and two years later carried on the Procuratie Nuove, spoiling Sansovino's beautiful design by adding a storey. The Porta dell' Anticollegio and other works on the Ducal Palace are by him. He, too, was in much demand as a designer of palaces in Venice and on the mainland.

¹ The present façade is the result of alterations by Scamozzi in 1610.

Masons

Greatest of the seventeenth-century masters, and one who laid the most monstrous burdens of stone on the patient Venetian soil, was Baldassari Longhena (1600-82), a native of Venice and pupil of Scamozzi. He helped to complete the Procuratie Nuove in 1638, and in 1630 was appointed the official architect of the Republic, an office which he honourably and judiciously fulfilled for half a century. The foundation-stone of his most famous work, S. Maria della Salute, was laid in 1631, but the church was still unfinished in 1660. The curious will find the design of this edifice to have been suggested by the section and ground-plan of a temple described by Poliphilus and illustrated in the *Hypnerotomachia*¹—that treasure-house of design so often looted by Renaissance and modern artists. Two massive edifices on the Grand Canal, the Pesaro and Rezzonico Palaces (1650); the high altars of S. Francesca della Vigna and S. Pietro di Castello; the interior of the Scalzi, "that pandemonium of details surpassed only by the greater delirium of Pozzo's high altar," were all designed by this master, whose heavy hand may also be seen in the masonry erected to Doge Pesaro in the Frari.

The art of the mosaicist, in its greatest splendour, is an essentially Christian development and adapted to the vast mural spaces of the Constantinian basilicas which were clamant for decoration. Although the art was practised in the peninsula by Italians from earliest times² it is indubitable that the oldest mosaics

¹ See Plate 72 in the Dream of Poliphilus, called the Hypnerotomachia, published in Venice by Aldus, 1499, reproduced by the Science and Art Department, South Kensington, 1888.

² Muratori has published an eighth century treatise on, and given many references to, the ancient practice of the art in Italy.

Venice and its Story

in St Mark's were the work of Greek craftsmen called from Constantinople in 1070 by Doge Selvo when he began the adornment of the brick edifice left by his predecessor: the provenance of the early mosaic decoration is obvious when we note the eastern character of its iconography. How great was the fame of these artists is evidenced from a letter addressed by Pope Honorius III. dated January 23, 1218, to the Doge of Venice, thanking him for having despatched a master mosaicist to Rome to decorate the basilica of St Paul, and praying that two others be sent to further the work. Vasari too relates that Andrea Tafi journeyed to Venice in the thirteenth century, and by means of promises, entreaties and bribes succeeded in inducing one of the Greek mosaicists working at St Mark's to return with him to Florence and help him with the mosaics at S. Giovanni. In 1302 Mastro Bingo and Mastro Pozzo were expelled from the works on S. Giovanni for having pilfered material appertaining to mosaic, and the Consoli of the Arte di Calimala were ordered to procure other good and honest masters from Venice and elsewhere.

Many of the twelfth and thirteenth century mosaics of St Mark's have been destroyed and replaced by modern works, and others repeatedly restored; for the supposed permanence of this method of decoration has not been actualised in practice, and continual repairs and renewals are, and have ever been, necessary to maintain the mosaics in good condition. Unhappily the restorations have not always been judiciously carried out, and in 1510 the Procurators¹ complained that the masters were heedlessly destroying works of far greater artistic value than those by which they replaced them, and similar complaints have not been wanting in modern times. The Procurators of St Mark's have always been preoccupied with the supply of good mosaic workers, and in the fifteenth century ordered every master to train at least two pupils in the art lest the practice of it be lost. In 1524 Vicenzio Bianchini, having inflicted three grievous wounds on the person of one Angelo, son of Master Agostino, barber, was condemned to two years in jail and ten years' banishment from Venice. Before, however, he had finished his time the Procurators, at their wits' end to find mosaicists, prayed the Senate to permit his return. Their prayer was granted on condition that Vincenzo worked without salary for the two years of his uncompleted term and gave security for 200 ducats; but since the masters' wages are entered in the Procurator's books it is clear that the artist was paid as usual for his labour. Later, after the invention of villainous saltpetre, complaints were made of the injury done to the mosaics by the discharge of bombards and fireworks on the piazza, and the Procurators succeeded in obtaining careful regulation of the practice. In 1608 portions of the marble facing of the W. front having been broken and lost, the money-changers and others who crowded against the building were ordered to remove their stalls and benches to the line of the flag-staffs.

¹ The first of the Procurators of St Mark's, Angelo Falier, was appointed in 1105; their duties were to maintain the fabric and decorations of the basilica and to administer its revenues.

Mosaicists

In the fifteenth century, mosaic, in common with the other arts in Italy, was swept onward in the reaction against conventional Byzantine models and the debased ecclesiastical art of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, and had part in the renaissance of naturalism which followed the appeal made to the masses of the people by Franciscan and other mendicant orders. At the beginning of the fifteenth century the school of Greek mosaicists¹ which had been reinforced by the immigration of artists after the capture of Constantinople, seems to have died out, for the Procurators were compelled in 1624 to have recourse to the Senate to obtain the recall of a master from the Riviera of Genoa, since the only artist capable of executing and repairing the mosaics at Venice had recently died. Their efforts were probably without result, for in 1450, the Venetian painter Michael Giambono, one of the Muranoese school of craftsmen, had completed the decoration of the new chapel of the Mascoli with mosaic: a new and broader school of mosaicists appears, and the peculiar richness and grace of their art is, in spite of modern restorations, amply exemplified to-day by these beautiful creations. Saccardo, however, believes that the cartoons from which Giambono worked were due to the Florentine artist Michelozzo, who was at Venice in 1433 with Cosimo dei Medici. Giambono and his fellow-mosaicists seem to have left no artistic posterity, and the chapel of the Mascoli remains a unique masterpiece. Towards the end of the fifteenth century four Venetian masters, Silvestro, Antonio, Pietro and Marco dal Musaico are found on the Procurator's books, and appear to have been employed in repairing the damage wrought by the great fires of 1419 and 1489. The apse seems to have especially suffered, and the Christ in the semi-dome was wholly renewed and finished by Master Pietro in 1506, who, with his son Vincenzo, a priest, was subsequently dismissed for misconduct. In 1507 the name of Vincenzo Sebastiani appears, who, we learn from Saccardo, fell from the scaffolding while at work on the S. Thecla in one of the pendentives of the cupola of the S. transept on ¹ They executed the mosaics in the atrium, part of the interior of the church and of the baptistery, and the whole of the Chapel of S. Isidore.

Mosaicists

March 18, 1512, and died within two hours. A few years later Marco Luciano Rizzo and Vincenzo Bianchini are admitted as masters: in 1524 followed Francesco Zuccato, son of Sebastian Zuccato, Titian's master and chief of the talented family of mosaic workers, who with the aid of cartoons by Titian and other great painters made the interior of St Mark's famous throughout Italy in the sixteenth century. It was the later work of Zuccati that evoked Vasari's enthusiasm when he visited Venice. Their mosaics, he declared, seemed like oil paintings when seen from below, and some of their smaller subjects resembled miniatures rather than inlaid stones. This new development was the beginning of the end of the great period of the art. The masters, despising the uneven work and artistic restraint of the older mosaicists, now aimed at the production of smooth surfaces and purely pictorial effects. But in truth the goffa maniera of the earlier workers so contemptuously referred to by Vasari, was the result of a profound science and an admirable artistic apprehension of the limitations of their art; their rich and beautiful polychromatic and decorative effects were due, not to an artless, but to an artful, disposition of the angles of the cubes, and to a conscious sobriety in the use of material; the futile attempt of the sixteenth century masters to imitate the painter's art was a servile act and the beginning of the decadence of mosaic. So far was this new development carried that the Zuccati were denounced to the Procurators by their rivals the Bianchini¹ for having in their mosaics of the Apocalypse (p. 299) used the methods of painting to produce certain effects, and the most famous artistic tribunal known in history, consisting of Paolo Veronese, Tintoretto, Titian, Jacopo Pistoia, and Schiavone was called in 1563 to adjudicate between the parties. Although Titian avowed himself their friend and praised their work, and although the artistic honours of the great trial were on their side, the Zuccati were condemned to reset at their cost in true mosaic the portions in question, and an order was made by the Procurators, that in future, at the examination of the masterpiece which every worker was compelled to execute and exhibit in order to obtain the post of maestro dal mosaico, the work should be washed over, to prove if it were real mosaic or not.

¹ These rivalries between the Bianchini and the Zuccati and their jealousies and enthusiasms form the basis of George Sand's delightful romance Les Maîtres Mosaïstes. The time-honoured, fictitious horrors of the Piombi prisons and the cruelty of the Ten are of course given full play, and generally the facile novelist's historical setting leaves much to be desired in point of accuracy. It was a mysterieux voyage

The long artistic career of the brothers Francesco and Valerio Zuccato came to a close about 1570, and the figure of St Mark in the atrium over the principal portal executed from a cartoon by Titian, and the Resurrection of Lazarus, the Entombment and Crucifixion of Christ, the Burial of the Virgin, the Evangelists, the Prophets and the Doctors of the Church on the walls near by, from cartoons by Pordenone, Salviati, and by the mosaicists themselves, may be regarded as the best of their works. In 1524 the priest Alberto Zio was admitted as a master and in association with Rizzo, and Francesco Zuccato wrought the beautiful mosaics in the sacristy. In 1537 Vincenzo Bianchini's indeed that the sbirri led poor Francesco, blind-folded, after he had left the Procurator's office in the Piazza, through a range of galleries, courts and stair-cases, over the Bridge of Sighs to the Piombi which were situated in the Ducal Palace—not to speak of the mere detail that the bridge was not begun until thirty years after the trial. It would have been difficult too for the mosaicists of the sixteenth century to have strolled along the broad Riva degli Schiavoni which was not constructed until the eighteenth.

Mosaicists

brother Domenico, and in 1556, his son Giovanni Antonio, won their mastership; Valerio Zuccato's son, Arminio, joined them in 1578. Giacomo Pasterini who exhibited his masterpiece in 1614, is the last of the great sixteenth and seventeenth century artists. He executed the God the Father in the semidome over the door inside the sacristy with such excellent effect that the Procurators gave him a present of fifteen ducats beyond his ordinary remuneration. The great plague of 1630 carried off three of the masters, Ceccato, Gaetano, and Luna, who were Pasterini's colleagues, and none was left to succeed him. In vain the Procurators charged the Venetian ambassador in Rome to make diligent search for masters. In 1683, disgusted by bad workmanship, they reduced the number of workers, and the famous school of master-mosaicists of St Mark's declined to its end. Rapidity of execution increased, wages diminished, simple cartoons were no longer sufficient, and veritable pictures were required to help along the halting craftsmen. A period of baroque art ensued until in 1715 a talented Roman master, Leopold dal Pozzo, came to Venice and for thirty years executed works of repair and renewal in St Mark's, which, with rare modesty and skill, followed the ancient work so faithfully that they long remained unnoted. Of his original work the most striking and celebrated is the mosaic over the porch to the N. of the main entrance of the basilica, the Reception of the Body of St Mark by the Doge and Senate which Saccardo regards as the richest in the cathedral after those in the Mascoli Chapel; but regrets that the brilliant work is as much out of place in its present position as a bright jewel would be, placed on the cheek, instead of on the brow, of an august and white-haired matron. The aggressive brilliancy of the mosaic is due to the fact that it is wholly wrought of cubes of enamel.

Venice and its Story

Dal Pozzo died in 1745, leaving no artistic heirs; and a period of neglect, and of restoration worse than neglect, followed. Italy from north to south was searched for competent masters; proclamations from the steps of St Mark's were made, but all in vain; none but pitiful work was done, and in 1806 one Giacomo Monaco proposed to renew 1460 square feet and restore 2600 more of the mosaics, but luckily political complications stayed his devastating hand. In 1810 Salandri, a Roman, was at work, sometimes alone and sometimes in collaboration with Giovanni Moro and others, and executed certain mosaics so abominably that the authorities refused to accept them. None the less, the composition over the chief portal was confided to him, with what result the visitor may judge. From 1822 to 1858 his colleague Moro was active in evil-doing, and the havoc he wrought may be exemplified by examining, among other works, the seven fat and seven lean kine and the sleeping Pharaoh in two of the spandrels of the atrium, and the St Mark in one of the pendentives of the great central cupola. In 1846 the vault of the Apocalypse needed repairs, and a painter, Zambler, was instructed to make tracings of the Zuccato mosaics, which were to be destroyed; Moro was to prepare the new cartoons and execute the new mosaics. While the work was in progress, Moro was suddenly disgraced and imprisoned after thirty-six years' service, but he retained his cartoons and refused to surrender them. Zambler's tracings had been lost, and in 1860 a German, Blaas, was commissioned to design new ones. Much opposition was aroused, and at length, by the discovery of Zambler's tracings by P. Saccardo, from whose exhaustive and masterly work¹ we chiefly draw, and the fall of the Austrian power, the scheme was finally quashed. But new perils threatened. The tottering house of Salviati¹ & Co. had been propped by English capital, and the new Venezia-Murano Company was given the monopoly of the mosaic work in St Mark's for fifteen years. Moro was to be employed in order to obtain the use of his notes and cartoons relative to the old mosaics. The society began well, but on a change of management the artistic standard was lowered, and the unhappy Apocalypse mosaics were so bungled that history repeated itself, a lawsuit ensued, and the contractors were compelled to remake the mosaics which had been painted over with the brush. The miserable mutilations in the Mascoli Chapel and the baptistery, and in other parts of the cathedral were suffered to remain. Two years before the expiration of the term the firm was compensated and the contract annulled. At length the Italian Government established an atelier for the preservation and restoration of the mosaics of St Mark's, under the direction of Pietro de Vecchio, at whose dismissal in 1883 Saccardo was appointed. Saccardo's aim has been to prevent, as well as to repair, injury to the decorations; the old mosaics of the Zeno Chapel which had been replaced by Salviati's, have been discovered and restored to their original positions; repairs have been executed wherever possible by means of the old tesserae which remain from many past destructions, and when it became necessary to repair the actual fabric, the old mosaics were removed by an ingenious process, which the writer was privileged to witness in operation in 1891, in solid masses, and replaced when the repaired wall was fit to receive them.

¹ Les Mosaïques de St Marc à Venise, P. Saccardo, 1897.

Painters

More completely than her masons were Venetian painters dominated by rigid Byzantine formalism. It seems barely credible that Jacobello del Fiore, who for twenty-one years was head of the painters' guild in Venice, and Michele Giambono, should have been the contemporaries of Masaccio and Fra Angelico. It has been said that Agnolo Gaddi influenced the development of Venetian painting, but according to Vasari, the Florentine master settled at Venice after he had applied his mind to trade, finding it much more profitable than painting, and only practised his art there as a pastime. Antonio Veneziano was undoubtedly born in Venice, and is said by Vasari to have studied under Agnolo Gaddi at Florence, and to have returned to his native city, where he was employed by the Signory to decorate one of the walls of the Great Council; but owing to the excellency of his painting he aroused the jealousy of his brother artists and again went to Florence. The same author states that Antonio subsequently executed the best of the frescoes in the Campo Santo at Pisa. But the emancipation of Venetian painting from the numbing tradition of the East did not begin until the employment of the Umbrian masters, Gentile da Fabriano and Vittore Pisano, to decorate the Ducal Palace in 1419, and the rise of the Vivarini in Murano in 1440-1500. The marked German character of the earliest work of the Vivarini is due to the association of Antonio Vivarini with Giovanni Alemano¹ (John the German), who was trained in the Cologne school, and by some authorities is believed to be a Vivarini. Later, Antonio collaborated with his younger brother, Bartolomeo; then the brothers separated, and each worked alone. Bartolomeo, by far the greater personality, was much influenced by Mantegna and the Paduan school, and under him Venetian painting takes a big step towards naturalism; the sacred altarpicture becomes less conventional, the figures are less cramped, the colours brighten, the decoration is richer.

¹ Not the present Salviati Company.

¹ Until quite recently no clue to the origin of this painter could be found. The discovery of a will made by one Johannes de Auspurgo, who died in 1458, is believed by Dr Ludwig to establish his identity.—Jahrbuch, vol. xxiii., Beiheft.

Painters.

When Antonello da Messina, about 1473, brought the perfected Flemish method of painting in oils to Venice, Bartolomeo was not slow to adopt the new medium. Alvise Vivarini, his younger kinsman, made further use of Antonello's innovation, and touched, moreover, by the spirit of the Bellini, the young painter, whose works cover the period between 1464-1502, begins to foreshadow the future glories of Venetian painting. The earnest, severe, almost harsh features become softened, a strange grace and gentleness comes like a breath of springtime and promise over the whole field of Venetian art.

Besides several paintings by the Vivarini in the Accademia there are in Venice: a fine example of Bartolomeo's work, the St Augustine, in S. Zanipolo; a Coronation of the Virgin by Giovanni Alemano and Antonio Vivarini, with marked German traits, in S. Pantaleone; three altarpieces by the same two painters in S. Zaccaria; an early work (1473) in three compartments by Bartolomeo, the Meeting of Joachim and Anna, the Birth of the Virgin, and Mary as the Mater Misericordiæ, in S. Maria Formosa; a Virgin between St Andrew and St John (1478), in S. Giovanni in Bragora, where are also two works by Alvise, one, the Resurrection, a masterpiece. In the Frari are two altarpieces by Bartolomeo (1474 and 1478), and a fine example of Alvise's work, St Ambrose Enthroned, finished after his death in 1502 by his pupil Basaiti. The beautiful Virgin and Child with two angels, in the Redentore, formerly attributed to Giovanni Bellini, is now generally given to Alvise. The striking and noble figure of St Clare (No. 393) in the Accademia is by this master, to whom modern criticism assigns a very high place¹ in the history of Venetian painting. Many portraits formerly ascribed to Antonello da Messina are now recognised as Alvise's work.

Venice and its Story

But it is to the paintings of Gentile, and Giovanni, sons of Jacopo Bellini, that the traveller will turn again and again with increasing admiration and reverence. In 1421, Jacopo, who had worked under the Umbrian masters in the Ducal Palace, went with Gentile da Fabriano to Florence, and there for several years was his pupil in the very centre of the renaissance of art. He was an ardent admirer of the new Tuscan schools, and in 1430 set up a workshop in Venice; in 1437 he was already a member of the Guild of St John the Baptist, and assisted by his sons, was much in request as a painter of decorative works for the guild-halls of the city. About 1450, he came under the powerful influence of Mantegna, who married his daughter Nicolosa. Venice possesses but two examples of his work, No. 582 in the Accademia and a Crucifixion² in Room XV. of the Correr Museum: all his guild pictures have perished. Only from the master's sketches in the British Museum and in the Louvre can an adequate conception of his genius be obtained.

Gentile, the elder of the sons, whose name was given him in memory of Jacopo's beloved master Gentile da Fabriano, was born in 1429, Giovanni about 1430. Vasari tells of the affectionate rivalry of the artist family; the father's joy as the growing

¹ See Berenson's "Lorenzo Lotto," chap. ii., sec. vii., revised ed., 1901.

² A doubtful attribution.

Alinari, Florence

PALAZZO LAYARD—PORTRAIT OF SULTAN MAHOMET II.
BY GENTILE BELLINI

Painters

excellence of his sons already eclipsed his own fame ; the sons, after separating each to his own workshop, holding one another, and both, the father, in great reverence, each praising his brother's work and depreciating his own, seeking modestly to excel in kindness and courtesy as well as in the practice of his art. In 1464 Gentile painted the shutters of the organ in St Mark's with the figures of Saints Mark, Jerome, Theodore and Francis. They still exist, but almost ruined, in the Office of Works. No. 570 in the Accademia, a faded painting, the Apotheosis of the Patriarch S. Lorenzo, is an early work, refined and dignified. In 1479 the Doge, being asked by Sultan Mahomet II., the conqueror of Constantinople, to recommend a good painter of portraits and an architect from Venice, sent thither Gentile and a certain Bartolomeo, and appointed Giovanni to continue his brother's work in the Ducal Palace. Gentile's remarkable portrait of the Sultan is now in the Layard Collection in Venice. The painter returned from Constantinople after a comparatively short stay, loaded with presents and honours, to rejoin his brother at the Ducal Palace. In 1487 Titian is said to have entered his workshop as an apprentice. Later, the master painted for the guild of St John the Evangelist the three scenes illustrating the miracles of the Holy Cross, now in the Accademia. Towards the end of his life he began the Preaching of St Mark for the Scuola di S. Marco, now in the Brera at Milan, and falling sick, left their father's sketch-book to his most dear brother Giovanni, on condition that he completed the picture. Gentile was a good draughtsman, a brilliant colourist, an alert observer, boldly making use of his Eastern experiences to add local colour to his subjects. His compositions, however, are rather crowded and wanting in central emphasis; his treatment is flat and hard. His will is dated February 18, and his death, February 23, 1507, is noted by Sanudo.

Venice and its Story

Giovanni, his more gifted brother, is the tenderest and noblest of Venetian painters. He gave more attention to individual figures than Gentile, uniting grace and firmness of outline with warmth and splendour of colouring; deep pathos and fervent religious sentiment with admirable self-restraint; dignity and strength with variety and beauty of form. His creations, once seen, haunt us like memories of beloved friends. In early life Giovanni assisted his father to decorate the Gattamalata Chapel at Padua, and was much dominated by the personality of his brother-in-law Mantegna, to whom some of his early works¹ have been attributed. A good example painted in tempera of his early Madonnas may be seen (No. 583) in the Accademia. An apocryphal story is told of the artist going to Antonello to have his portrait painted in order to learn the secret of painting in oils. But the new method must have been too well known to have made the trick necessary. In 1470 he was working on the decoration of the Guild of St Mark, but nothing remains to-day of these large subject pictures. Venice possesses several altar-pieces by Giovanni, besides the collection in the Accademia, now conveniently placed in Room XVIII. The altar-piece in the Frari and that in S. Zaccaria are the finest examples of the master's art in Europe, painted in the maturity of his genius—1488 and 1505. They are held by Ruskin to be the two finest pictures in the world. In S. Pietro Martire at Murano is another of the same period. In 1474, says the annalist Malipiero, Zuano and Zentil Bellini, brothers, were employed at the Ducal Palace to restore the pictures of the meeting of Pope Alexander and the Emperor Barbarossa, which had fallen from the walls because of damp and old age. The brothers promised that their work should last two hundred years. But they reckoned without the demon of fire, for a hundred years later it was devoured by the conflagration of 1577. An altar-piece in S. Giovanni Grisostomo, painted when Giovanni was eighty-seven years of age, proves that the old craftsman was ever a learner. Albert Dürer, when in Venice, was profoundly impressed by the veteran painter, and wrote that although very old, he was still the best in his art. He died in 1516, full of years and rich in fame. Dürer was well treated at Venice; the Doge and the Patriarch came to see his paintings; Bellini praised him highly and offered to buy one of his works. His only complaint was that the Painters' Guild¹ summoned him three times before the magistrates, who ordered him to pay four ducats to the guild for permission to practise his art. The Venetians, after the orthodox Greek fashion, were wont to have a Madonna in every room, often under a tabernacle, and lighted with tapers or a lamp. These were of the conventional Byzantine type, but so popular did the Bellini style become that the Madonna painters (a flourishing craft in Venice) were overwhelmed with orders for the new manner of picture, and the old Greek forms were soon superseded. Zuan Antonio da Malpasso, pittor delle madonne, had a large factory of Bellini Madonnas.

¹The Pietà, and the Transfiguration in the Correr Museum.

Painters

Vittore Carpaccio is the chief of the newer generation of painters trained under the influence of the Bellini. His talent for telling a story with richness of detail and quaint simplicity has never been surpassed. The "histories," for so these compositions were officially called, painted for the Guild of S. Ursula (1490-95) are admirable examples of his power, and of capital importance for the study of contemporary Venetian costume and architecture. Smaller in scale but equally charming and naïve are the St George and the Dragon, and St Jerome series of paintings in the lower hall of S. Giorgio degli Schiavoni and the St George and the Dragon in the Sala del Conclave at the Salute. The well-known Presentation at the Temple, a noble work, No. 44 in the Accademia (1510), is obviously inspired by Giovanni Bellini. The altar-piece in S. Vitale (1514) and three paintings in the Accademia, Nos. 89, 90, 91, painted in 1515, are later works telling all too plainly of declining power. Little is known of Carpaccio's life. He travelled in the East, was working at Venice in 1479, and died in 1525.

¹ The importation of paintings was rigorously prohibited, and no foreigner was permitted to practise his art at Venice unless he were a member of the guild.

Venice and its Story

Sebastiani (Lazzaro Bastiani), his contemporary, worked with Gentile Bellini, Benedetto Diana, and Mansueti in the decoration of the Guild of St John the Evangelist. The Offering of the Relic to the Brotherhood, No. 561 in the Accademia, is by his hand. His works are rare: three pictures in the Accademia; a Pietà in S. Antonino, much influenced by Squarcione; a more pleasing work, the S. Donato, at Murano—are all that Venice can show by this not greatly inspired artist. He was chosen by Giovanni Bellini, 1508, to value Giorgione's frescoes on the façade of the Fondaco dei Tedeschi, and died in 1512.

To Giovanni Mansueti are due two of the Guild of St John pictures, rich in examples of Venetian costume and architecture, and two scenes from the life of St Mark painted for the guild of that name, now placed in the apse of Room XV. in the Accademia. He and his colleague Benedetto Diana, who painted one of the legends of the Holy Cross for the Guild of St John,

MADONNA DELL' ORTO—THE BAPTIST AND FOUR SAINTS
BY CIMA

Painters

were influenced by Gentile Bellini and Carpaccio. Benedetto's masterpiece, the Virgin Enthroned, an early work, is in the Accademia, No. 82. The much-disputed Christ at Emmaus in S. Salvatore has been attributed to him. Only scraps of the biographies of these two artists are known. The former was lame, and died in 1530; the latter once competed successfully with Carpaccio for the painting of a gonfalone for the Guild of Charity, of which he was a member, and died in 1525. Marco Marziale, a follower of Carpaccio, was much influenced by Albert Dürer during his stay at Venice, as may be seen in the Supper at Emmaus, No. 76, the only work by him in the Accademia. Little is known of his life. He was painting in the Ducal Palace in 1492, and still living in 1507.

Giovanni Battista Cima, da Conegliano, son of a cloth-dresser (Cimatore di panni), a pupil of Alvise Vivarini, and one of the many painters from the mainland to whom Venetian art owes so much, is a great typical colourist of the Bellini School. To a feeling for colour he brings the expression of his love for natural scenery. The beautiful background of mountain landscape, the dignity and warmth of the saintly figures, the romantic architecture with tufts of the *erba della Madonna*¹ growing from its crevices, in his altarpiece in the Madonna dell' Orto, make it, though technically immature, one of the most delightful examples of Venetian art. Other maturer works by him are in S. Giovanni in Bragora and the Carmine: the Accademia possess seven of his paintings. He was born in 1460, settled in Venice in 1490, and died about 1517. His Virgin and Child, with St Michael and St Andrew, now in the Parma Gallery, was long admired as a masterpiece by Da Vinci.

Marco Basaiti, a pupil of Alvise Vivarini, and influenced by Bellini, is a good colourist and a lover of natural scenery ; but his work is somewhat lacking in strength and character. The Accademia has five of his paintings, of which the Agony in the Garden, No. 69, is the best ; another and later one, Peter Enthroned, is in S. Pietro di Castello. He was working between 1490 and 1521. Catena (Vincenzio di Biagio), yet another of Giovanni Bellini's school, is a sweet and graceful painter and occupied an exalted social position in Venice. He was a friend of scholars and learned patricians, and endowed with a fine literary taste. The Martyrdom of S. Cristina in S. Maria Mater Domini is an early work of much charm, and the church of S. Simeon Profeta has a picture by the master ; two are in the Accademia and one in the Ducal Palace. The Judith in the Quirini-Stampalia and a Virgin and Child with the Baptist and a female saint, in the Palazzo Giovanelli are assigned to him by Mr Berenson. This noble and ingenuous artist has suffered much from the attribution of many of his best creations to Giovanni Bellini and Giorgione. He was working between 1495 and 1531.

¹ The ivy-leaved toadflax.

Venice and its Story

Pier Francesco Bissolo, pupil and assistant of Giovanni Bellini, is a capable artist, the last of the school, whose best work, Christ offering the Crown of Thorns to St Catherine, is in the Accademia (No. 79) with three others. The Virgin and Child with St John and St Catherine in the Redentore, formerly attributed to Bellini, is now assigned to Bissolo. He died in 1554.

The advent of the romantic, almost mysterious, personality of Giorgione (Georgio Barbarelli) marks an epoch in the story of Venetian painting. Few artists in so short a life wrought so great a work. He lifted Venetian painting to the highest sphere of poetic inspiration and technical perfection, and influenced the whole of its subsequent progress. Yet paintings by his hand are rare. One alone, the Castelfranco altarpiece, is beyond dispute, and that, says Morelli, is daubed over by a Venetian restorer. Of the scores of works formerly put upon him in Europe few can now be safely defended, and of these few a bare half-dozen are allowed to Italy. The unstable position of expert opinion may be exemplified by the vicissitudes of the Miracle of St Mark, No. 516, in the Accademia, long since removed from its former position of honour and placed in a badly lighted corridor. This, once assigned to Giorgione by Boschini, and at a later date generally attributed to Paris Bordone, is now esteemed by Mr Berenson to be one of Giorgione's¹ greatest achievements; Crowe and Cavalcaselle doubt if the "inky and spacious canvas" was ever touched by Giorgione; the official catalogue of 1895 assigns it to Palma Vecchio, that of 1903 to Paris Bordone and restorers of the eighteenth century. We are on safer ground when we examine the Gipsy and Soldier in the Giovanelli Palace. Nothing can be seen at Venice to surpass this superbly beautiful composition for originality, poetic grace and romantic beauty. A fairly convincing work is the Apollo pursuing Daphne, almost ruined by a restorer's daubing, in the Seminario of the Salute. Of the many frescoes he painted on Venetian palaces, especially those on the canal side of the Fondaco dei Tedeschi so eloquently described by Vasari, only a fragment remains, a head, torso and part of the arms, of a female figure. When Evelyn was at Venice in 1645, the frescoes seem to have been in good condition. The plague, or grief at the infidelity of his mistress, brought this great artist to a premature death in 1510. He was born about 1478. Passionately fond of music and song, his whole soul was attuned to impressions of inward and outward beauty. With him, romantic as distinguished from ecclesiastical painting leaps into being.

Painters

¹ "The Study and Criticism of Italian Art," p. 81.

Titian (Tiziano Vecellio) is the complementary genius to Giorgione. In him is summed all that the Venetian school promised or attained to. Lacking perhaps the sunny radiance of Giorgione's temperament, his larger experience of life, his deep strong nature give him a pathetic insight into the tragedy, as well as the beauty, of existence, so characteristic of great artists and poets. To judge fully of Titian's life-work one would need to travel over the greater part of Western Europe—to Madrid above all. Venice possesses but a score of his paintings, and these not the very greatest. Early works, attributed by some critics to Giorgione, are the Ecce Homo in the Scuola, and the Christ bearing the Cross, in the Church of S. Rocco. A somewhat later work, St Mark Enthroned, in the Sacristy of the Salute, painted shortly after 1504, for S. Spirito in Isola, still bears traces of Giorgione's influence. The famous Assumption in the Accademia, first of the grand compositions of the latter Venetian school and generally regarded as a masterpiece, was finished in 1518. A finer picture finished in 1526 in the maturity of his power, is the Pesaro Madonna, in the Frari; the beautiful Annunciation in the Scuola di S. Rocco was painted according to Crowe and Cavalcaselle in 1525: Dr Gronau believes it to be of a later date (about 1545); the Presentation, in the Accademia, now restored to its original position, is a later work, 1538. The Tobias and the Angel, perhaps painted about 1540-1543,¹ in S. Marziale, is a work composed with unusual simplicity and charm. We see the great master in one of his happy moods like a strong man bending to play with his children. In addition to Doge Grimani's ceremonial portrait there exists an unrestored fresco, the latest known by his hand, in the Ducal Palace. Many sacred subjects were painted late in life. In S. Salvatore are an Annunciation, a finely-conceived work, and a Transfiguration, both executed when he was nearing ninety years of age. The grand old fellow died in harness. He failed to finish the Deposition, now in the Accademia, completed by Palma Giovane. "Titian is our standard-bearer," said Velazquez when he saw him in Venice, and when Vasari was there in 1566 he called on the veteran painter and found him, although eighty-nine years old, brush in hand. The friends had much converse together of their art and of the master's works. He died in 1576, wanting but one year to complete his century. A generous incident in the painter's life is brought vividly before us by the depositions of witnesses¹ who attended at the Courts in 1550 to prove the legality of his marriage with Cecilia, daughter of the quondam master, Alo di Giacomo, of Perarol di Cadore, barber. One November afternoon Tiziano informed his bachelor brother Francesco that he was minded to marry Madonna Cecilia, who lay sick in bed, and to legitimatise their two children, Orazio and Pomponio, for the respect he bore her. Francesco answered that he was right glad, wondered that he had not done it before, and exhorted his brother to give effect to his purpose without delay. That same November evening Master Nicholas at the sign of the Cross, goldsmith, was summoned to bring straightway a wedding-ring worth from four to five ducats, and his friend, Master Silvester the mason, to the painter's house. There they found the parish priest Paolo, who legally performed the ceremony.

¹ Morelli, however, classes it among Titian's early productions.

Painters.

¹ Ludwig, Jahrbuch, Beiheft, 1903.

The masters remembered it well although it was twenty-five years ago, for they all stayed to a good and merry supper, the goldsmith adding that Madonna Cecilia was a most worthy and gentle lady (la era gentil et daben). Cecilia recovered and lived to bear her husband two daughters,¹ of whom Lavinia, generally under the name of Violante or Flora, became her father's most beautiful model. With Titian, Venetian painting reached its meridian glory. Inspiration and technical mastery went hand in hand. He has been defined as the painter par excellence as distinguished from the draughtsman who colours. In his new manner, that became absolute painting which in the Bellini and Carpaccio was but coloured drawing.

Palma Vecchio (Jacopo Negretti), 1480-1528, Titian's contemporary, is the third of the dominant sixteenth-century painters. Without the finely endowed nature of his two fellows, he works with much energy and freshness, is masterly in his use of colour, and has a breadth and serenity of style which make of him a great, but not a paramount artist. The well-known St Barbara in S. Maria Formosa is the most grandiose and majestic female figure in Venetian art. The recently acquired Santa Conversazione, No. 147 in the Accademia, is an excellent example of a mode of composition which Palma brought to its ultimate form. He was the creator of that opulent type of female beauty with "marmoreal neck and bosom uberous" so characteristic of Venetian art, of which many examples are preserved in the Imperial Museum at Vienna.

Sebastiano del Piombo (Sebastiano Luciani), 1485-1547, a pupil of Giorgione, was a younger painter of the school, a competent but not very gifted interpreter of the prevalent type of sensuous beauty. The painting on the high altar in S. Giov. Grisostomo is a fine example of his early style and in Vasari's time was attributed to Giorgione. There is an early Pietà in Lady Layard's collection and a doubtful Visitation in the Accademia. Early in his career he went to Rome and won the friendship of Raphael and Michel Angelo by whom his later style was profoundly influenced. This period of his activity belongs to Roman rather than to Venetian art.

¹ Ludwig, Jahrbuch, Beiheft, 1903.

Painters

One of the manifold results of the mainland expansion was the settlement at Venice of colonies of artists from the Friuli, the Bergamasque, and others of the new provinces. The Bergamasques, with the clannishness of Highland folk, seem to have congregated in the parishes of S. Cassiano and S. M. Mater Domini. They were simple, honest, painstaking artists, good colourists, but somewhat lacking in imagination. Chief among them were Francesco di Simone da Santa Croce, who in 1507 painted the altar-piece in S. Pietro Martiro at Murano; Francesco da S. Croce, surnamed Rizzo (curley pate), who in 1513 painted a Noli mi tangere now in the Accademia; Girolamo da S. Croce, who Dr Ludwig¹ adduces good reasons for believing to be the Girolamo mentioned in Gentile Bellini's will, and who was to share with his fellow-assistant Venturi the sketches brought back by the master from Constantinople (retracta Roma). Girolamo's earliest known work is the S. Thomas of Canterbury, patron of Venetian wine coopers (1520) in S. Silvestro: his latest the Last Supper (1549) in S. Martino. Girolamo's son Francesco being born in Venice dropped the da, and with the death of Pietro Paolo S. Croce about 1620 the atelier seems to have closed. The Licini were a numerous family of artists whose descendants are still living in the valleys of the Serio and the Brembo near Bergamo. By Bernadino Licinio, who was painting in Venice in 1511, the Accademia possesses a portrait (303), but most of the family seem to have settled at Murano where no less than thirty are known either to have worked as journeymen or to have owned furnaces (padroni di fornace). Many were inscribed in the Golden Book of Murano, and one worked for the famous Berovieri. In 1471 Pietro Licinio was proprietor of the works known as the "Golden Pine": Tomaso of the "Dragon" was prosperous enough to commission Carpaccio to paint a S. Thomas Aquinas for the family altar and grave in S. Pietro Martino.

¹ See the results of his researches among the Venetian Archives, Jahrbuch. Beiheft, 1903.

Of the Previtali, from the valley of the Imania, Andrea, who first named himself Bergomensis, and subsequently adopted the surname Cordelleaghi, is the best known. In the Accademia are two of his works—a Nativity (No. 639) and a Christ on the Cross (640); the St Catherine in S. Giobbe is a replica of a picture in the National Gallery of London (No. 1409), signed Andrea Cordelleaghj dissipulus Jovanis, Bellini, 1504. Giovanni Busi (Cariani), whose father was Comandador¹ of the Signory, was born before the family migrated from Bergamo, and spent his active life from 1508 to 1567 in Venice. His works are rare, but a Virgin and Child (156) and two portraits (300 and 301) are attributed to him in the Accademia catalogue.

Of the Friulian, Martino da Udine (Pellegrino da S. Daniele, 1467-1547), the Accademia possesses three examples. No. 151, an Annunciation, is a replica of the same subject in his best work, the series of frescoes in the church of S. Antonio, at S. Daniele, near Udine. Pictures by him have been assigned to Giorgione.

¹ An official whose duty it was to cry the decrees or proclamations from the Pietra di Bando at St Mark's, the Rialto, and other public places in the city.

Painters

But greater than he, there came to Venice in the early sixteenth century, from Pordenone, Martino's pupil Giovanni Antonio Sacchiense, known as Pordenone, an artist of power, but who showed that pride in technical skill so characteristic of a declining art. He parades his anatomical knowledge and science of foreshortening, with all Michael Angelo's daring, but with none of his genius. Most of his works are on the mainland, but one characteristic altar-piece, No. 316, and three other paintings are in the Accademia in Venice. In the cloister at S. Stefano are some frescoes (in which medium he excelled), now almost ruined, and a St Sebastian, better preserved, in the church of S. Rocco, where also is a fine painting by him of St Christopher and St Martin. Another good work is the altar-piece—S. Rocco, St Sebastian and St Catherine—in S. Giovanni Elemosinario. His Entombment, in the Monte di Pietà at Treviso, has been ascribed to Giorgione. He was working in Venice during the early sixteenth century, and died at Ferrara in 1539. From Treviso came the brothers Piero Maria Pennachi (1464-1515), and Girolamo Pennachi (1455-1496), and a son of Piero named after his uncle Girolamo. Of Piero's work the Accademia possesses one example, Christ among the Doctors (85), and of the elder Girolamo, a Transfiguration (96). The fine altar-piece, St Roch between SS. Jerome and Sebastian in the Salute, is also attributed to this artist. Their countryman Rocco Marcone (active between 1505 and 1526) is represented at the Accademia by his most important work a Pietà (166), and in S. Zanipolo by a signed altar-piece in the grand manner of Palma, Christ between SS. Peter and Andrew. But chief of the Trevisans is the highly gifted but unequal Lorenzo Lotto (1480-1556), who was working in Venice early in the sixteenth century. He is one of the more original of the contemporaries of Titian. Much attention has recently been given to this artist, especially to his portrait work, by Mr Berenson, who awards him high but perhaps somewhat exaggerated praise, as the first painter who sought to interpret the varying moods of the individual human soul; an artist of penetrating sympathy and charity, preserving for us in his portraits the lineaments of the more gentle and refined of his contemporaries. These, however, must be sought anywhere but in Venice. One altar-piece, painted in the maturity of his powers, may be seen in the Carmine, St Nicholas in Glory, a work of real poetic feeling; another, better preserved, the Apotheosis of S. Antonino, is in S. Zanipolo. A later work, the Virgin and Child with Saints, is in S. Giacomo dall' Orio.

Venice and its Story

The name of Bonifazio is associated with a remarkable revolution and counter-revolution in the history of criticism. Vasari and the older writers knew but one painter of that name, who was called by some Bonifazio of Verona, by others, of Venice. In 1864 Bernasconi, by the aid of documentary evidence, discovered two Bonafazios; and in 1877 Morelli,¹ by applying his famous method (the shape of the ears, outline of the bodies and other similar criteria) evolved three, who were distinguished as Bonifazio I., II., and III. With few exceptions the whole of the works in European Galleries, including the Accademia of Venice, formerly attributed to one Bonifazio, were then grouped under these three heads, and re-catalogued.

¹ Morelli, Italian Masters in German Galleries, translated by Mrs Richter, pp. 184-94.

Painters

Vasari's accuracy has, however, been vindicated by the recent publication¹ of Dr Gustav Ludwig's patient and conclusive researches, which demonstrate (1) that Bonifazio Pasini of Verona (1489-1540), the so-called Bonifazio I., could never have left Verona for any length of time between 1515 and his death, and that nothing is now known of his works: (2) that Bonifazio di Pitati of Verona (1487-1553), Morelli's Bonifazio II., came, a youth of eighteen, with his father, a soldier, to settle in Venice in 1505; learned his craft at Palma Vecchio's workshop; married a basketmaker's daughter; became one of the most famous painters in Venice; in 1530 was commissioned to decorate the Palazzo de' Camerlenghi (Treasury offices); and died, childless, in 1553, leaving the work to be completed by Tintoretto, who for a period adopted Bonifazio's style; (3) that Bonifazio III. is a mere phantom of Morelli's imagination.

Bonifazio, like all successful painters of the Renaissance, kept a large number of assistants and pupils to supply the demands of his clients at home and abroad, himself executing the more important parts of his productions, and supervising the work done in his atelier. The paintings assigned to Bonifazio I., such as the Rich Man's Feast, No. 291 in the Accademia, and the Virgin and Child with SS. Omobono and Barbara in the Palazzo Reale, are those executed by Bonifazio di Pitati's own hand in the days before prosperity had rendered personal execution of the whole of his work impossible. The paintings attributed to Bonifazio II., such as the Woman Taken in Adultery, No. 278 in the Accademia, the Massacre of the Innocents, and the Fall, in the Palazzo Reale, works which betray a falling off in vigour and firmness of drawing while retaining the old brilliancy of colour, are those which were partly executed by his assistants. The paintings allotted to Bonifazio III., feeble work, such as the Last Supper in S. Maria Mater Domini, and most of the panels with figures of two or more saints, of which the Accademia possesses so many examples, were painted wholly by assistants during Bonifazio's lifetime, or after his death. Nearly the whole of those in the Accademia formerly attributed to Bonifazio III., many of which have been post-dated owing to a vicious theory of interpretation, were side panels painted for more important central compositions in the Treasury Offices. The last (Italian) edition of the official catalogue (1903), adopts Ludwig's conclusions. Bonifazio, who always signs himself "da Verona," is an eminently naturalistic painter. With perfect art he portrays for us the sensuous magnificence of the Venetian patrician's life; his luxurious home; his well-nurtured body; his powerful, sagacious intellect; his love of the country; his gorgeous costume; his pet animals; his ideal of female beauty.

¹ Jahrbuch, vols. xxii. and xxiii., 1901-1902.

Venice and its Story

A talented pupil of Titian who came under Michael Angelo's influence was Paris Bordone (1495-1571). He has the distinction of producing the finest of Venetian ceremonial paintings, No. 320 in the Accademia, and no picture will evoke in the beholder a deeper sentiment of the peculiar charm of Venice. The magnificent architecture; the dignified Fathers of the State in their rich costumes; the romantic legend it illustrates; the warm, golden, sunny atmosphere in which the whole composition is bathed, make this the most essentially Venetian picture in the world. The Accademia has other works by this artist—the Paradise, No. 322, a poor canvas, and a small panel, No. 311.

Two great artists preserved the power and grandeur of the Venetian school during a time when elsewhere in Italy painting had sunk to nerveless mannerism and mawkish sentimentality. Tintoretto (Jacopo Robusti), 1518-94, a pupil of Bonifazio, and much influenced by Titian and Michel Angelo, is a painter who may only be studied at Venice. A fine example of his early work painted under Titian's influence, is the Adam and Eve, No. 43 in the Accademia. In 1552 he painted two panels for the Palazzo Camerlenghi, in continuation of Bonifazio's work, now in the Anti-Chiesetta of the Ducal Palace; and, a year later, the dramatic Miracle of St Mark, Accademia No. 42. This central work admirably displays the qualities of his genius. The composition is grandly conceived; the drawing stupendously clever and virile. But the craftsmanship is too insistent. The artist aims at displaying his triumph over difficult but non-essential problems of foreshortening and perspective and the whole scene is characterised by that "bustle and tumult" which Reynolds complains of in his criticism of Tintoretto's work. Other paintings that may be noted are the Marriage of Cana in the sacristy of the Salute; two large and confused canvases, the Last Judgment and the Golden Calf, in the choir of the Madonna dell' Orto; the charming Ariadne and Bacchus, with its companion pictures, and the colossal Paradise in the Ducal Palace. His last work, S. Marziale, is in the church of that name.

Painters

Admirers of Tintoretto may sate themselves at Venice. The Accademia and the Ducal Palace are rich in his works and the Scuola of S. Rocco alone is a veritable Tintoretto museum. The sixty-two compositions there, exhibit the painter's characteristics fully developed, his weakness as well as his strength. Never had sacred history been treated with such uncompromising realism. No one can contemplate these tremendous scenes without being impressed by the power of the genius that conceived them; none can turn away without a feeling of regret that so greatly endowed an artist should, in his later career at least, have been wanting in reverence, and in the incredibile diligenza which Vasari noted in all Titian's work. He was a passionate, impatient worker, too often unconscionably superficial. His bold, vigorous, rapid execution is such that the practice of painting in his hands seems to partake of the nature of physical exercise.

Venice and its Story

When Goethe was frequenting the official picture-restorers at S. Zanipolo in 1790, it was discovered that Tintoretto had been in the habit of leaving spaces for the more important heads in the large compositions executed in situ (probably by pupils), which he would paint at home and stick on the canvas afterwards. How presto e resoluta the grand artist was, may be learned from the story told by Vasari of the march he stole upon his competitors for the decoration of a room in the Scuola di S. Rocco. He had already painted his masterpiece, the Crucifixion, for the Sala dell' Albergo, and the guild determined to decorate the hall with something magnifica ed onorata. Salviati, Zuccheri, Veronese, and himself, were selected to send in designs. While his rivals were diligently at work, Tintoretto had taken the measurement of the space to be filled, painted his canvas with incredible rapidity and secretly fixed it in its place in the hall. When the masters of the guild met to examine the designs they found his work already finished. To their angry remonstrances the artist coolly replied that that was his way of competing, and if they did not care to pay him he would make them a present of the painting. Even in 1790 much of Tintoretto's work had become dull, almost leaden in colour, due, Goethe thought, to the artist's habit of painting alla prima without ground colours, or simply on red paint. Tintoretto left many followers, who neither sounding the depths of his knowledge nor possessing the magnanimity of his style, imitated him in his "splendid negligence" and contributed to the final decadence of painting.

S. CATERINA—THE MARRIAGE OF ST CATHERINE BY VERONESE

Painters

His younger contemporary, Veronese (Paolo Caliari), 1530-88, reverts to and develops to an even higher degree the warmer and more brilliant colour of the school. He is the unsurpassed interpreter of the festal pomp of Venetian society. Without possessing the elemental force of Tintoretto he is a more careful artist. How nobly and gently he could conceive, may be seen in the decoration of the church of S. Sebastiano, painted 1555-65, and in the marriage of St Catherine at the church of that name, his most tender and beautiful work. Of his well-known banquet compositions, the Accademia possesses the finest specimen, the Supper at the House of Levi, No. 203. In this magnificent painting, with its marvellous drawing and spacious architecture, the artist revels in his power of expressing the joy of man in the satisfaction of material existence. This glorification of the pomps and vanities of the world, painted for the refectory of the Dominican friars at S. Zanipolo, did, however, shock the Church, and the head of the Holy Office called on the Prior and severely criticised the picture. On the 8th of July 1573, Master Paolo Caliari was cited before the tribunal of the Inquisition. Being asked his profession, he answered, "I invent and draw figures." The inquisitor objected to the absence of Mary Magdalene and ordered that she should be substituted for the dog in the foreground; to St Peter carving a lamb; to a fellow dressed like a buffoon, with a parrot on his wrist; to another using his fork as a toothpick, and similar indecencies. The artist defended himself stoutly and was ordered to reform his picture within three months. Veronese substituted the name of Levi for that of Simon and altered nothing. Veronese was a noted house decorator of his time. None of his work survives at Venice, but visitors to Castelfranco may by a short detour see in the Villa Giacomelli, near Maser, some of the artist's best fresco work on the walls of a characteristic Palladian country-house.

How great was the artistic wealth of Venice in the middle of the sixteenth century may be inferred from the catalogues of the pictures and other treasures in but a few of the patrician mansions made by the "Anonimo":¹ how grievous the losses have been, may be seen by noting how few have survived to the present day.

Palma Giovane (1544-1628), son of Antonio Negretti and of Bonifazio's niece Giulia, is the last of the school in whom the great traditions faintly survive. Besides his pictures in the Accademia some of the best of his work may be seen in the Oratorio dei Crociferi. The school is now decadent; its productions become feeble and mannered.

With the works of the Bassani we reach the beginnings of modern painting. They are moderns not only in their dominant love of landscape, but in their touching affection for lowly peasant life and for the flocks and herds of their native hills. The family consisted of Jacopo da Ponte (1510-92), the father, and his sons Francesco (1549-92) and Leandro (1558-1623). The Accademia has good examples of their work, but to appreciate fully these homely and sympathetic artists one must travel to their native city Bassano, in the beautiful hill country north of Venice.

¹ The "Anonimo," translated by P. Mussi, 1903.

Painters

Giovanni Battista Tiepolo (1696-1770), was a famous painter in the grand manner; in the eyes of his contemporaries the equal of Veronese. He was a fine colourist, a bold and skilful draughtsman, with a broad and facile style, an excellent interpreter of the decadent splendour of Venetian life, and was in much demand as a decorator of palaces and churches. His best work may be seen in the frescoes executed for the Palazzo Labia. Among other churches, the Scalzi and the Gesuati have examples of his work in ceiling decoration, and there is a good altar-piece by his hand, St Lucy, in the SS. Apostoli.

Pietro Longhi (1702-85), is an admirable painter of scenes of intimate Venetian life in the eighteenth century with its trivial artificiality and social inanities; he has been aptly called the Goldoni of Venetian painters. Of Antonio da Canale (Canaletto), 1697-1768, that patient, honest artist who has so faithfully painted for us the Venice of his day, and the more charming and romantic Francesco Guardi (1712-93), Venice has few and poor examples.

Most ancient and important was the art of the glass-worker, peculiarly favoured by the abundance of fine sand and of a marine flora rich in alkaline products. In the thirteenth century so great was the expansion of the industry that it was deemed prudent to transfer the many furnaces working night and day from Rialto to Murano. It was a jealously guarded monopoly. In 1459 the Ten took over the control of the art and forbade under severe penalties (in some cases death) the emigration of workmen or the divulging of the secrets of the craft to foreigners. The craftsmen had their own libro d'oro and ranked with patricians. Some beautiful examples of the masters, whom the genius of Marion Crawford¹ has invested with such dramatic interest, Zorzi il Ballarin and the Berovieri, may be seen at the Murano Museum, and an exquisite blue nuptial goblet in Room XII. at the Correr Museum in Venice. Wondrous stories are told of the subtle art of the craftsmen, who were famed to make goblets so sensitive that they would betray by fracture the presence of poison.

¹ "Marietta or the Maid of Venice."

Venice and its Story

The Venetians were great bibliophiles and readers. Soon after the discovery of the art of printing, Venice became its most important centre in Italy and by the end of the fifteenth century more books had been published in Venice than in Rome, Milan, Florence and Naples put together. On September 18, 1469, Doge Cristoforo Moro authorised Zuan de Spira to print books for a period of five years. In 1470 Nicolo Jansen was issuing the Latin classics; in 1471 he published an Italian translation of the whole Bible, and in 1476 an edition of Pliny in the vulgar tongue. In 1490 the great humanist, Teobaldo Pio Manuccio of Rome (Aldus Manutius, or, as he wrote himself, Aldus Romanus), chose Venice as the most appropriate city for the achievement of his stupendous design of editing and printing the whole of the Greek classics, which during the earliest practice of the art were deemed by Italians too precious to be reproduced by means of an invention made among the barbarians of some German city. He gathered round him the greatest scholars of the age. Cretan Greeks were employed as designers of his types and compositors. Latin and Italian classics were printed in the type first used in the Virgil of 1501 and known as italics or aldino, which is said to have been modelled on Petrarch's handwriting and executed by Francia. Erasmus acted for a short time as editor and reader, and the great Dutch humanist had his translations of

Printers

Euripides and his Adagia printed there. Erasmus and Aldus were good friends and would have been better if the fare provided at dinner had been less Lenten. The scholar's heart to-day warms to Aldus, whose steady, glowing enthusiasm carried him through his great task amid all the stress of the wars of the League of Cambrai. He founded at his house the famous Accademia di Aldo, where a symposium of humanists met for the study and emendation of the Greek classics. The rules were drawn up and the discussions conducted in Greek. Four years after Aldus, came Master Lorenzo Gusnasco of Paris, famed throughout Italy for the supreme excellence of his lutes, viols and clavichords, for in Venice the finest materials were to be had, the most precious ivories and choicest woods, and there he found the best market for his wares. There, too, he knit a firm friendship with Aldus, and enjoyed the society of the best artists and scholars of the day. Giovanni Bellini and Mantegna delighted in his company, and Lionardo da Vinci, when in Venice in 1500, brought to him his drawing of Isabella d'Este, now in the Louvre at Paris. Some fragments of the beautiful clavichord that Lorenzo wrought for Beatrice d'Este, rescued from the sack of Milan by the French in 1500, may now be seen in the Museo Civico, the restored palace of the Estes. Before Aldus died, in 1515, he had published twenty-eight editiones principes of the Greek masterpieces. He was the first of modern publishers, the first to break down the monopoly of the rich in books. His charming little octavo volumes with their familiar device of the anchor and the dolphin, so precious to the modern bibliophile, were sold at prices averaging about two shillings of our money. A large export trade in books was developed, mainly by the German and Flemish merchants at the Fondaco de' Tedeschi, and from Spain to Hungary Venetian printed books had a ready sale. Limited editions on vellum were printed for exalted and rich patrons and priced at $2\frac{1}{2}$ -3 ducats each. Isabella d'Este, however, returned her order, complaining that the price was twice the worth of the books. Aldus died a poor man, and his kinsmen and descendants carried on the good work for a century.

Venice and its Story

If we turn from printing to literature we are met by a remarkable and impressive fact. Alone among the nations of Europe, Venice has given birth to no great literature. Save her crumbling architecture all that she conceived of the beautiful is expressed in painting. It is a great inheritance and immortalises a people of merchant princes, proud, sensuous, resourceful, with a firm grip of the realities of life, deeply religious in its own way, but without the spiritual idealism of the Tuscan. Through the millennial tale of her existence as a State, no great poet,¹ no great thinker, no great dramatist meets us; none save a fluent and graceful writer of comedies of the Decadence, who was descended from a Modenese, and whose best work was written in a foreign tongue for a foreign capital.¹

¹ Since the above was written a scholarly and exhaustive volume by A. Medin, entitled: La Storia della Repubblica di Venezia nella Poesia, has been published in which the titles of, and excerpts from, 873 compositions in Latin, Italian, Venetian and French are given which form a commentary on Venetian history. The impression, however, left on the reader's mind as well as the author's is a melancholy one, for, of all the stirring scenes in which the Republic played a leading part, not one has evoked a contemporary poem worthy of being ranked as literature. Indeed the learned and patriotic author is fain to console himself for the sterility of the native verse in comparison with the rich efflorescence of epic and lyric poetry in Provence and France during the times of the fourth crusade, by the reflection that the richer their allies were in poetry the poorer they were in money, and that the Venetians, in lieu of verses, presented their fatherland with an uninterrupted line of ports from the Adrian gulf to the shores of Asia.

Printers

¹ Goldoni's grandfather was a native of Modena: Il Barbero Benifico was first performed at Paris and subsequently translated into Italian.

PART II

The City

“They might chirp and chaffer, come and go
For pleasure or profit, her men alive—
My business is hardly with them I trow,
But with the empty cells of the human hive;
—With the chapter-room, the cloister-porch,
The church’s apsis, aisle or nave,
Its crypt, one fingers along with a torch,
Its face set full for the sun to shave.”

—Browning.

SECTION I

Arrival—The Piazza

THAT traveller will best attune himself to the peculiar charm of Venice, who arrives after sunset, when evening has veiled the somewhat unlovely approach to the city by railway. For the great lagoon State ever set her face to the sea and adorned herself to welcome her guests as they were rowed from Fusina, or as they sailed up from the Adriatic, to land at the Molo, the chief landing-stage by the Piazzetta.

Lieto apre al tuo apparir or l’Adria il seno,
E si polisce et orna
La persa gonna e’l suo ciglio sereno,
Che è di beltà, d’alte ricchezze adorna :
Raddoppia il dì, e l’ atra notte aggiorna.

The modern visitor arriving by train is like one who should enter a stately mansion by the stables. Once, however, in his gondola, the "black Triton" of the lagoons, gliding along the waterways to the strangers' quarter by lines of houses and palaces, whose walls, timeworn or neglected, sometimes degraded, will be mellowed under the dim light of the infrequent lamps, he will be caught by the spell which Venice casts over those who come to her.

The Piazza

But there are two Venices: the Venice of the canals and the Venice of the streets. The traveller will do well therefore to go on foot¹ to some of the sights he would see, for by no other means can he do justice to the varied beauty of the streets, the quaint fragmentary remains of ancient architecture, the brilliant patches of colour, the little shrines, and all the countless details that go to make the by-ways of the city so full of surprise and pleasure to the pedestrian. The difficulty of finding one's way from point to point has been greatly exaggerated. Anyone with a map and a normal sense of direction can with a little patience reach his destination. The churches are usually situated on or near a campo; a stream of people will generally be found passing along the streets and over the bridges between the campi, and a well-worn track marks the more frequented ways. If he should find himself blocked by a canal, a short deviation to the right or left will generally lead to one of the 380 bridges by which, to use Evelyn's picturesque phrase, the city is tacked together. Even if hopelessly lost, a soldino given to a boy will soon bring him to where he would go.

The waterways, 150 in all, are divided into canali and rii. The canale is the broader, the rio the narrower stream. The rii are by far the greater ¹ We have essayed, taking the Piazza as a starting-point, to describe the way to the principal objects of interest in the city.

Venice and its Story

in number. But the pedestrian is more concerned with street nomenclature. A fondamenta is a way alongside a canale or rio; a calle is a street with houses on either side; ruga or rughetta (French rue, ruelle) was first applied to streets with a few new houses here and there, and the appellation was retained in later times when the houses or shops became continuous; a salizxada is one of the earliest of the paved streets, generally near a church; a rio terra, a rio filled up and paved; a piscina, a fish-pond treated in the same way; a ponte, a bridge; a campo, a paved, open place, formerly a field; a campiello, a smaller campo; a corte, a court. Avoid a vice cieco (blind alley), or a viccolo cieco. The city is divided into six sestieri or wards, subdivided into parocchie or parishes, and the houses are numbered by sestieri, the numbers reaching to thousands. The Merceria, a crowded thoroughfare, leads from under the Clock Tower in St Mark's Square, after many kinks and turns, to the Rialto bridge over the Grand Canal, which is spanned by two other bridges about equidistant from the Rialto bridge. E. and W. of the Rialto, in addition to these bridges, numerous ferries (traghetti) make either bank of the Grand Canal easy of access, and small steamers (vaporetti) call at frequent piers the whole length of the chief waterway. Travelling by gondola, therefore, is to be regarded as a luxury rather than a necessity. The gondola bears the same relation to Venetian life as does the cab or carriage to the dweller in an ordinary town. The average tide in the city is about twenty inches: on exceptional occasions, the difference between high and low water has been six feet.

The Piazza of S. Marco, bereft though it be of its most eminent but not its most beautiful feature, offers to the traveller a scene of unparalleled interest. East-

THE PIAZZETTA

Venice and its Story

wards it is adorned by the most wonderful group of Byzantine and Gothic architecture in Europe ; to the N. is the rhythmic symmetry of Pietro Lombardo's Procuratie Vecchie, ending with the Clock Tower¹ ; to the S. are the Procuratie Nuove, Scamozzi's tasteless elaboration of Sansovino's lovely design for the Libreria Vecchia on the Piazzetta ; westward is the baser structure of Napoleonic times. Opposite the Porta della Carta of the Ducal Palace stood for a thousand years the old Campanile, like a giant sentinel set towards the lagoons to watch over the city. On the morning of July 14th, 1902, to the stupefaction of the Venetians, the huge tower, which in its massive strength seemed to defy the tooth of time, gently collapsed,² as though weary of its millennial watch, crushing in its fall Sansovino's beautiful Loggetta and the N. side of the Libreria Vecchia, but miraculously doing no further hurt. When the Venetians recovered from the shock and learned how mercifully exempt from toll of human life the disaster had been, and that St Mark's and the Ducal Palace were unscathed, they remembered their protector and said : È stato galant' uomo S. Marco (St Mark has been a good fellow). Ten months later, when the King and Queen of Italy, during their visit to Venice, turned to look at the site of the old tower, a lament was heard in the crowd of people : I varda dove gera el nostro povaro morto (They are going where our poor dead one lies). The foundations laid a thousand years ago have been strengthened by 3076 larch piles which have been driven in around them, and a new Campanile will, perhaps, in years to come replace, but not restore, the old one, which, with all its dramatic history and romantic associations, has disappeared for ever.

¹ Now assigned to Moro Coducci of Bergamo.

² Probably due to the slow subsidence of the soil of Venice, which is estimated by Boni to take place at the rate of about nine centimetres in a century.

The Piazza

It is not by accident that the chief buildings of Venice stand where they do, for this part of the Rialtine islands, called il Morso, offered a soil harder¹ and more tenacious than any other. In early ages the Piazza was a grass-grown field, called the Broglio or Garden, scarce a third of its present area, and a large elder tree flourished on the site of the Campanile. It was bounded on the W. by a rio which ran from N. to S. a few yards beyond the Campanile and discharged into the Grand Canal to the W. of the present Zecca (mint). On the W. bank of the rio, facing the basilica of St Mark, stood the old church of S. Geminiano. In 1176 Doge Ziani filled up the rio, razed the fortifications and extended and paved the Piazza to its present boundary westward. The church of S. Geminiano was rebuilt at the W. end; again rebuilt by Sansovino in 1556 and finally demolished by Napoleon I. to extend the Royal Palace. Houses on the S. abutted on the Campanile. The Piazza was enclosed by stately mansions with columns and arcades on the first floor, "where one walked round as in a theatre."² When Scamozzi built the Procuratie Nuove in 1584, the houses on the S. were demolished and the Piazza set back to its present line.

If we would restore its aspect in the fulness of Venetian prosperity, we must imagine a scene brilliant with colour. The archivolts, capitals, friezes and sculptures generally, of St Mark's and the Ducal Palace were richly decorated with gold and vermilion and blue. The Porta della Carta glowed so with gold that it was known as the Porta dorata (the gilded ¹The Ducal Palace is not built on piles, but rests on a stratum of stiff clay.

²Sanudo.

Venice and its Story

portal). The bronze horses were gilded; so was St Mark's Lion and St Theodore in the Piazzetta. From Leopardi's beautiful bronze sockets three tall masts upheld the standards symbolising dominion over Greece, Cyprus and Crete. A throng of merchants and strangers from all the corners of the earth, an ever-changing pageant of quaint and gorgeous costumes, passed and repassed; groups of eager listeners hung on the lips of story-tellers. So many strange tongues would you hear, says an old writer,¹ that the Piazza might not inaptly be called the forum orbis non urbis—not the market-place of a city but of the world.

Strange tongues are still heard in the Piazza, but of those who come for the pleasure, not for the business of the world: the heart of commerce no longer beats at Venice. The Piazza is, however, a scene of much animation on public holidays when the band is playing. We will sit outside Florian's coffee-house, as a good Venetian should, and observe the women of the people passing, with their graceful carriage and simple costume, their wealth of hair so charmingly treated; the gondolier, lithe of body and superb in gait; the signore and signorine with their more modern finery; the fashionable youth, dressed, as he fondly imagines, all' inglese; rich and poor, borgnese and popolano, bearing themselves with that ease of manner, vivacity of spirit and social equality so characteristic of the Venetians. In the height of summer, when the rich merchants of Milan and other cities of North Italy with their women folk come to Venice for the Italian season, the Piazza after dinner and far into the night becomes one vast open-air salon, crowded with visitors in the most chic of costumes, many of the ladies promenading in evening dress. As we sit in the Piazza at setting sun, the atmosphere, exquisitely delicate and clear, changes from pale blue to amethyst, pink, turquoise, dark blue and indigo ; and the night is lovelier than the day.

¹ Italia brevis Descriptio, Ultrajecti, 1650.

The Basilica of St Mark

SECTION II

*The Basilica of St Mark*¹

FEW things in the history of art are more remarkable than the revulsion of taste that has taken place with regard to the architecture of Venice. Gibbon "after darting a contemptuous look at the stately monuments of superstition at Paris" was afforded "some hours of astonishment and some days of disgust by the spectacle of Venice." In the early part of the nineteenth century, before Ruskin wrote "The Stones of Venice," an English architect,² giving expression to the professional judgment of the age, speaks of "the lumpy form of the Cathedral which surprises you by the extreme ugliness of its exterior; of the lower part built in the degraded Roman we call Norman; of the gouty columns and ill-made capitals, all in bad taste." "The Ducal Palace is even more ugly than anything previously mentioned," vastly inferior to Palladio's churches of S. Giorgio and the Redentore. Disraeli echoes in "Contarini Fleming" the conventional lay praise of Palladio, and writes of the "barbarous although picturesque buildings called the Ducal Palace." Even to-day the stranger fresh from the North with memories of the massive towers and lofty spires of his own architecture, will hardly escape a sense of disappointment as he stands before St Mark's. The fabric will seem to lack majesty and to be even less imposing than the Ducal Palace. It must, however, be remembered that the raising of the level of the Piazza has somewhat detracted from the elevation of both the basilica and the Palace. Fynes Moryson notes in his Itinerary (1617) that "there were stairs of old to mount out of the market-place into the church till the waters of the channel increasing they were forced to raise the height of the market-place."

¹ St Mark's and S. Salvatore's are open all day: the other churches usually from 6 A.M. to noon. Admission to the more important churches, the Frari, S. Zanipolo, the Miracoli, S. Sebastiano, may be gained during the afternoon by knocking at the door: a charge of 50 centesimi is made for admission to these four. At the other churches a boy will generally be found who for a soldo will fetch the sacristan. If the visitor desires to see any of the churches in his own way the sacristan may be given his tip and dismissed with courtesy.

² "Letters of an Architect from France, Italy and Greece," by Joseph Woods, 1828, vol. i., p. 256, et seq.

Whether there were any such intention in the minds of the builders is doubtful, but in all communities where the sense of municipal liberty or of secular independence is strong, the dominant civic power is actualised in architecture. In Flemish towns the Hôtel de Ville and not the cathedral is often the more important structure; even so in Venice the subordinate position of the church is marked by the accessory character of the ecclesiastical building, which in its origin indeed was but the official chapel of the Doge, and only became the Cathedral in 1807, when Napoleon transferred the patriarchate from S. Pietro in Castello—itsself a poor thing architecturally—to St Mark's.

Joseph Woods gave a shrewd criticism of Venetian architecture when he characterised it as showing riches and power rather than just proportions. St Mark's was erected by a merchant folk, with all the merchant's love of display of wealth; their taste was for costly material rather than for nobility and grandeur of design. For centuries the ruined Roman cities of Altinum, of

DEERICKSON

S. MARCO—MAIN PORTAL

Aquileia on the mainland were ransacked for precious stones to adorn the sanctuary of their patron saint, and the captain of every ship that traded in the Levant was ordered to bring home marbles or fine stones for the builders. St Mark's is a jewelled casket wrought to preserve the Palladium of the Venetian people.

The main fabric dates from the eleventh century.¹ Its core is of brick, of which most Venetian churches are built, and it is veneered with rich marbles² from Greece, red porphyries from Egypt, and orient alabaster and other precious stones from Arabia, and decorated with mosaic and sculpture. The gorgeous effect of the marble facing was obtained by slicing up ancient columns and pillars and reversing the grain. When the eye turns from the whole to examine details, the façade is seen to be composed of two tiers of arches—the lower of seven, the upper of five spans. Of the seven, two form the N. and S. porticos; five the western doors, whose recesses are enriched with rows of columns wanting in unity of design, but of exceeding richness and variety of material. They are mainly the spoils of Eastern churches and, if closely scrutinised, will be found to be incised with Eastern crosses and curious inscriptions in Greek and oriental characters. The capitals flanking the main portal, with carving of leaves blown by the wind, are probably from the East, their prototype being at the Church of St Sophia in Thessalonica, built in the later years of Justinian's reign. The main portal is spanned by an inner triple archivolt and an outer main one. The under side of the inner arc of the former, over the relief of St Mark and the Angel, is wrought with sculptures, whose subjects are symbolical, generally of Oriental invention, and will be met with again and again in early Venetian decoration: a naked man and woman seated on dragons; a child in the open jaws of a lion; an eagle pecking at a lamb; a lion devouring a stag; camels and other animals, wild and tame, in various groups. On the outer face are similar carvings of boys fighting and robbing birds' nests; men shooting birds with bows and arrows, and hunting wild beasts. The work is exceedingly quaint, and affords a fruitful theme for interpretation.

¹ See p. 33, note.

² Unhappily most of the old Greek marbles have been replaced by inferior Carrara. It was once proposed by the restorers to varnish and smoke the S. façade, to imitate the rich colours which the mellowing effect of time has given to the original incrustations.

The Basilica of St Mark

The sculptures on the under side of the outer arc symbolise the months of the year, with their appropriate celestial signs. On the left at bottom, January, a man carrying a tree; Acquarius above him being represented by wavy lines denoting water. The sequence is continued upwards: February, an old man in cloak and hood warming his feet at a fire; above him is the sign of the Fishes. March, a warrior bearing spear and shield; above is the sign of the Ram.

S. MARCO—DETAIL OF ARCHIVOLT

S. MARCO—DETAIL OF MAIN DOOR

April, a shepherd carrying a lamb; above is the sign of the Bull. May, a seated figure holding a rose and crowned with flowers by two maidens, is most beautiful and original in treatment; above is the sign of the Twins, the heads only being figured. June, a reaper cutting corn; above is the sign of the Crab. The keystone is carved with the figure of Christ. On the other side, downwards: July, a man mowing hay; above is the sign of the Lion. August, a youth sleeping; the sign of the Virgin is represented by a young girl just above the sleeper guarding him with raised hands. September, a labourer in a vineyard; above are the Scales. October, a man digging with a characteristic Italian spade; above is the Scorpion. November, a man snaring birds; above is the Archer—a centaur shooting with a bow and arrow. December, a man killing a pig; above is the sign of the Goat.¹

The Basilica of St Mark

On the outer face of the archivolt are represented the Beatitudes and the Virtues, eight on either side of the keystone, which symbolises Constancy.

On the under surface of the main archivolt are fourteen most beautiful carvings, representing the chief guilds and crafts of Venice. To the L.,² at the bottom, is a seated figure with finger on lip, said by Ruskin to represent the rest of old age; by tradition it is the portrait of the architect of the building, of whom the following story is told. When Doge Pietro Orseolo was minded to restore the church after the fire of 976, a queer, unknown man, lame in both legs, offered to make St Mark's the most beautiful structure ever erected, if, on completion, his statue were placed in a conspicuous part of the building. His terms were accepted, but after the work had progressed some time, the stranger incautiously let fall a remark to the effect that the church would have been much more magnificent if certain difficulties had not intervened. Word was sent to the Doge, and the statue was set in its present obscure position. Above this figure are: Boat-building, three shipwrights working at a boat. The Vintners and Vintners' porters. Baking. The Butcher. The Potter. The Mason and Bricklayer. Then to right of keystone (the Lamb of God); downwards: Shoemaking. The Barber Surgeon. The Cooper. The Carpenter. The Wood Sawyer. The Smith. The Fisherman.

On either side of the main portal are two doorways, spanned by richly decorated Byzantine arches; that to the L. has the figure of Christ in the keystone and two prophets with scrolls in the spandrels; that to the R. has the keystone defaced; in the spandrels to the R. and L. are the archangels Michael and Gabriel. The lateral doorway to the L. has in the lunette a winged figure on horseback and symbols of the Evangelists; on the lintel are some fine Gothic reliefs. The pierced screen-work in the lunette windows should be noted, for in olden times the great west window and the whole of the window spaces in the domes were thus treated. The corresponding doorway to the R. has in the spandrels, carvings of two archangels, and on the keystone the Virgin and Child. The beautiful lily capitals are at either end of the façade, and support the arches that span the N. and the S. porticos. The late fifteenth-century Gothic additions consist of pinnacles and gables of no structural value. They are seen in Gentile Bellini's picture,¹ dated 1496, of the Procession in St Mark's Square, but are absent in the extant thirteenth century mosaic. The six ancient bas-reliefs on the façade represent St George and St Demetrius, the Annunciation, and—the outermost on either side—the labours of Hercules. Crowning all, on the highest gable, stands Christ in the act of blessing; angels bearing Censers are below Him on either side. Immediately beneath is the Lion of St Mark in relief. On the lower gables are statues of warrior saints: between them, six tabernacles contain statues of the Evangelists and an Annunciation.

¹ Cf. Spenser's treatment of the seasons in the "Fairie Queen," two cantos of Mutabilitie, canto vii., v. 32, et seq.

² Left of the spectator.

The mosaics in the lunettes of the five doorways are, with one exception, poor in craftsmanship, but interesting in their storiation. That of the central portal is a feeble representation of the Last Judgment (p. 242). The remaining four tell of the discovery and translation of the body of St Mark. The story begins in the farthest

¹ No. 567 in the Accademia.

The Basilica of St Mark

porch to the south—right of the vaulting. The removal of the body from the church at Alexandria: left, the concealment in the basket: in the lunette the Saracens turn away in disgust at the sight of the swine's flesh. In the second porch, next the main entrance: the arrival at Venice and the procession accompanying the body ashore. These are seventeenth century work. In the porch to the left of main entrance is the reception of the body and devotion of the Doge and his senators, eighteenth century work by Dal Pozzo (p. 241). In the fifth porch, the body of the saint being carried into St Mark's, though largely renewed, is a precious relic of the beautiful thirteenth-century mosaics that covered the front in Gentile Bellini's time, as may be seen from the picture already referred to. The four mosaics in the lunettes on either side of the great window above, represent the Deposition from the Cross, the Descent into Hades, the Resurrection, the Ascension—all seventeenth-century work. Beneath the great window stand the four bronze horses, part of the spoils sent from Constantinople by Enrico Dandolo in 1204. They are said to be by Lysippus, and to have been sent from Rome to the new capital of the Empire by Constantine. They remained in their present position until 1797, when the "gran ladrone," Napoleon I., sent them to Paris to adorn the Arc du Carrousel. In 1815 they were restored to Venice by

BYZANTINE RELIEF, NORTH SIDE, S. MARCO

Venice and its Story

BYZANTINE RELIEF FROM SOUTH SIDE, S. MARCO

Francis I. of Austria, as the Latin inscription under the archivolt beneath tells. A magnificent festa was organised when they were raised to their old position in the presence of the Austrian. The Piazza was bright with gorgeous decorations; a superb loggia erected for the Imperial family; an amphitheatre for the Venetian nobility.¹ Nothing was wanting—but an audience. The amphitheatre was empty; a few ¹ The Austrian government gave permission to all whose names were in the Golden Book to assume the title of Count.

The Basilica of St Mark

loungers idled about the square. Cannons were fired; the bells rang a double peal; the music played; the horses were drawn up—but not a cheer followed them. The Emperor and his suite had the show to themselves.

CAPITALS, ATRIUM, S. MARCO

In the lunette of the N. portal, which gives on the Piazzetta dei Leoni, with its two double cusped inner arches, is an early relief of the Nativity, a work of great beauty, framed by the vine decoration so beloved of the early sculptors. Among the many Byzantine reliefs with which this façade is jewelled the most perfect is that of the twelve Apostles, symbolised as sheep, with the Lamb enthroned in the centre and palm trees on either side. This exquisite carving will be found in the last recess R. of the doorway.

Venice and its Story

The S. façade, looking as it does towards the Molo, would in olden times arrest the eye of the traveller as he entered the city; it is most lavishly decorated. The reliefs and marble facings towards the Porta della Carta are some of the finest that remain of the ancient basilica. Their lowly position seems to have preserved them from the restorer's hand. At the angle is a rude Greek relief in porphyry, probably from Acre, of two pairs of armed figures clasping each other. They are said to represent Greek emperors who shared the throne of the East early in the eleventh century. In the foreground stand the two beautifully decorated marble door-posts brought from St Sabbas in Acre. They should, however, change places to occupy the relative position they formerly held in the church. Below the mosaic of the Virgin and Child in the smaller arch above the gallery two lamps burn nightly in perpetual memory of an act of injustice perpetrated by the Ten in 1611, when an innocent lad, Giovanni Grassi, was executed. The short porphyry column at the S.W. corner is the old edict stone where the official notices and laws of the Republic were proclaimed to the people.

At our feet, as we enter the atrium by the main portal are three slabs of porphyry which mark the legendary, but not the actual, spot where the reconciliation of the Pope and the Emperor Barbarossa took place. The shafts and capitals of the columns in the atrium are among the richest in the basilica. So exquisitely lovely are the carvings of the capitals that they seem almost to realise those of the celestial and mystic mansion of Sion in the vision of Bernard de Morlaix.¹ The thirteenth century mosaics, designed to instruct and prepare the catechumen, illustrate Old Testament history, and for their simple beauty will repay perusal.

¹ *Nemo retexere, nemoque promere sustinet ore,
Quo tua moenia, quo capitalia, plena nitore.*

The Basilica of St Mark

In the south cupola are three concentric zones of mosaics which illustrate the six days of Creation, the Institution of the Sabbath, the Fall and the Expulsion from Eden. 1st Zone. (1) The Spirit of God, a dove with outstretched wings moving over the face of the waters. (2) Creation of Light; this, the first day's work, is indicated by one angel standing beside the Creator with hands uplifted in praise. (3) Creation of the Firmament; second day, two angels. (4) Separation of dry land from the sea, and the creation of plants; three angels. 2nd Zone. (5) Below No. 1, Creation of the sun and moon and stars, four angels. (6) Creation of fishes and birds; five angels, a most beautiful mosaic. (7) Creation of lower animals and man; six angels. (8) Institution of the Sabbath, the Lord resting from His work; six angels, three on either side, the seventh kneels receiving the Lord's blessing.¹ (9) Man is made a living soul. (10) Adam placed in Paradise. The four rivers are symbolised, pagan fashion, by river gods holding vases; wavy lines denoting water. 3rd Zone. (11) Under No. 5, Adam naming the animals. (12) Creation of Eve. (13) Eve presented to Adam. (14) The Temptation. (15) The Fall. (16) They clothe themselves with leaves. (17) The Lord calling to Adam. (18) The Lord reproving Adam, who accuses Eve. (19) The Lord giving sentence of banishment and cursing the serpent. (20) The Lord clothing Adam and Eve, most quaint in treatment; Eve looks reproachfully at the ill-fitting garment.

¹ The traveller who is acquainted with Burne-Jones' Days of Creation will note the influence of these mosaics on the English master's work.

Venice and its Story

(21) The Expulsion from Eden, the curse on labour.

Five mosaics in the three lunettes under the cupola tell the story of Cain and Abel. Beginning in the lunette over the door are (1) The generation of Cain and Abel. (2) Birth of Cain and Abel. (3) The offerings of Cain and Abel. The dextra Dei, a hand showing from a patch of starry firmament above Abel, is a frequently recurring symbol and indicates the Divine presence. (4) In lunette over the door of the Cappella Zen—the wrath of Cain: the Lord calling to Cain. (5) The two brothers go forth into the fields: the murder of Abel. (6) Opposite the door, Cain is reproved by God: the punishment of Cain.

Under the vaultings between the first cupola and the central vestibule is the story of Noah. (1) On the W. side above, God calling Noah and the building of the ark. (2) In the middle, Noah placing the birds and the animals in the ark. Noah is first tenderly handing in two peacocks, the symbol of Eternal Life. The birds are most beautiful in colour and drawing. (3) Below, Noah and his family enter the ark. (4) On the opposite side. Above, The Flood; Noah sending forth the dove; the raven feeding on carrion. (5) Middle, The return of the dove bearing a twig of olive in her mouth; The going forth from the ark. (6) Below, Noah sacrifices to the Lord; the dispersion of the animals. Opposite, beneath the semi-dome, decorated with mosaics of Christ, the Virgin and archangels, is the tomb of Doge Vitale Falier, in whose reign the body of St Mark was rediscovered. The story of Noah is continued on the E. side of the next vaulting. (7) Above, Noah gathers grapes and drinks wine. (8) The drunkenness of Noah. (9) Ham discovering his father's nakedness. (10) Below,

The Basilica of St Mark

Shem and Japheth cover their father with a garment. (11) Noah cursing Ham. (12) Burial of Noah.

On the W. side of the next vaulting is the story of the Tower of Babel. (1) Building the Tower. (2) Confusion of tongues. Below is the tomb of the Dogressa Felicia, the young wife of Vitale Falier, who, as the inscription tells, was a true servant of God and of the poor, and who spurned luxury (calcavit luxuriam).

The second cupola contains scenes from the life of Abraham. If the spectator will stand looking E. he will find that here, as in other cupolas, the story begins just S. of E., where the figure I would be on the dial of a clock, and follows round clockwise. (1) The call of Abraham. (2) He prepares for the journey. (3) His departure. (4) The Lord appears to Abraham a second time. (5) The rescue of Lot. (6) The meeting of Abraham and Melchizedek. (7) Abraham meets the king of Sodom. (8) The Lord's promise to Abraham: the patch of sky more crowded with stars to symbolise the words of the prophecy—"tell the stars if thou be able to number them: so shall thy seed be." (9) Sarah brings Hagar to Abraham. (10) Abraham delivers up Hagar to Sarah. (11) The angel of the Lord appears to Hagar in the wilderness and bids her return. (12) Birth of Ishmael. (13) The Lord appears to Abraham and institutes the rite of circumcision. (14) Abraham circumcises Ishmael. (15) Abraham circumcises his household. (16 and 17) in the lunette over St Peter, above the inner door, Abraham receives the three angels and entertains them. Behind is Sarah at the door of her tent laughing at the promise that she should bear a son. (18 and 19) opposite, are the birth of Isaac; the circumcision of Isaac. The third cupola tells the story of Joseph. (1)

Venice and its Story

bush. (8) In the lunette to the S., The Egyptians overwhelmed in the Red Sea, a modern work from a cartoon by Palma Vecchio. (9) opposite, The Israelites miraculously fed with manna and quails: the manna falls like snow; two women are grilling quails. (10) Moses strikes the rock and the waters run. Above the door at the end of the atrium, a large mosaic of the Madonna and Child enthroned. To the R., St John; L., St Mark. Wholly renewed by Moro in 1839-40.

Returning to the main portal of the atrium—in the lunette is the St Mark, executed by the brothers Zuccati; below in seven niches are the Virgin and Child and six Apostles; lower down on either side of the portal, the four evangelists. In the lunette, R., Raising of Lazarus; lunette over the outer portal, Crucifixion; Lunette L., Burial of the Virgin (p. 240).

No sense of disappointment will be felt at the first view of the interior. The symmetry of the architecture, the gorgeous mosaics, the rich pavement, the precious marbles covering the walls, the manifold variety of the columns, and (if the traveller have the fortune to be present on Easter or St Mark's Day) the dazzling brilliancy of the Pala d'Oro glittering with jewels make a scene of oriental splendour not easily forgotten. In earlier times, when the windows were filled with pierced screen-work of marble, the church was much darker, for, says Moryson, "the papist churches are commonly dark to cause a religious horror." Evelyn in 1645 found the interior dark and dismal.

Merely to name the whole of the subjects of the 40,000 square feet of mosaics in the interior would weary the reader; we do but indicate the more important and more interesting. The general scheme is designed to illustrate the mysteries of the Christian faith and the story of the patron saint. Over the main entrance is the oldest of the mosaics, probably an eleventh-century work—Christ enthroned between the Virgin and St Mark. In the book held by the Redeemer are the words in Latin, “I am the Door; if any man enter by Me he shall be saved and find pasture”: a similar inscription exists to this day over the Porta Basilica which opens into the nave of St Sophia at Constantinople. In the half dome of the apse the colossal seated figure of Christ in the act of blessing meets the eye of the worshipper as he enters the church and walks towards the sanctuary, even as it did in the apse at St Sophia¹ and other Byzantine churches. In the centre of the dome over the high altar is again the figure of Christ, and, above the windows, the Virgin, and the prophets who foretold Christ’s coming, bearing scrolls inscribed with their testimony. The pendentives bear symbolic figures of the Four Evangelists, that of the Lion of St Mark with a strangely human face, being designed with admirable force and dignity. Scenes in the life of Christ are portrayed on the vault between this and the central dome; the Passion and Resurrection on the vault between the central and western domes. The great central dome² is treated with profound thought and fertile invention, and executed with infinite care. In the apex is the glorified Christ seated on a double rainbow, surrounded by exulting angels; below are the Virgin, the Apostles and the Evangelists alternating with olive and palm trees; the beautiful figure of the Virgin stands between two angels. In the spaces

The Basilica of St Mark

¹ The dim outline of the figure may still be discerned from the gallery of the great mosque when the light is favourable.

² This dome is asymmetrical being 42 feet from north to south and 41 feet from east to west.

Venice and its Story

between the windows are the Virtues and the Beatitudes: they may easily be distinguished by their inscriptions and symbols. In the pendentives are the Four Evangelists writing (St Mark by Moro and St Matthew by Podio are modern): beneath them, the rivers of Paradise.

The W. dome treats of the Descent of the Holy Ghost. A white dove standing on a book placed on a throne fills the centre, and from this emblem of the Holy Spirit twelve streams of fire descend upon the figures of the Twelve Apostles circling the dome. The men of every nation to whom they spoke, each in his own tongue, are figured at the Apostles' feet between the windows. In the pendentives are four angels hymning the Lord God of Sabaoth.

In the dome of the N. transept is figured a Greek cross, in the centre of which are eight Greek letters set in a circle, whose meaning is doubtful. Near this centre, N. and S., is an alpha; E. and W. an omega. On the arms of the cross the Golden Rule is expressed in a Latin¹ quatrain, beginning on the E. and continuing on the W., N. and S. arms.

The dome of the S. transept bears figures of SS. Leonard, Nicholas, Clement and Blaise. In the pendentives SS. Erasmus, Euphemia, Dorothy and Thecla (p. 238).

On the W. wall of the S. transept opposite the Chapel of the Holy Blood is told, in two scenes, the story of the miraculous rediscovery of the body in 1094: the Doge, clergy and people, with solemn fast and prayer, implore divine aid, and a round

¹ Quod tibi vis fieri,
Hoc facias alteri:
Quod tibi non placeas,
Alteri ne facias.

The rhyme is maintained at the expense of the grammar.

The Basilica of St Mark

column in the church opens and discloses the saint's body. Tradition, however, says that the body was found in the large pier called St Mark's pillar, to the left of the Chapel of the Holy Blood. An angel's head in full relief is carved above the spot, and a lamp burns below an inlaid cross. The line of cleavage is still seen. Tradition, however, would seem to be at fault in this matter, for when the pillar was recently stripped of the marble facing, the solid core had clearly never been disturbed.

On the vaultings of the transepts are represented the parables and miracles of Christ. The vaulting to the E., between the S. and the centre domes, has delightfully naïve and dramatic scenes from the Temptation and the Entry into Jerusalem. On the western side are beautiful representations of the Last Supper and the Washing of the Disciples' Feet. The vaultings and the walls of the aisles are decorated with stories of the martyrdom of the Apostles.

On the lower walls of the aisles are repeated the figures of prophets that foretold the coming of Christ bearing the usual scrolls. In the N. are Hosea, Joel, Micah and Jeremiah, with a beautiful representation of the youthful Christ in the centre: S., are Isaiah, David, Solomon and Ezekiel, with the Virgin answering to the figure of Christ.

The Zuccati mosaics illustrating the Apocalypse—of which the fourth compartment, the Angels of the Seven Churches of Asia gave rise to the famous trial (p. 240)—and those by later masters illustrating the Last Judgment, cover the vaultings beyond the W. dome and over the W. gallery. They and many others of the upper series of mosaics are best seen from the galleries.

The story of the patron saint begins on the vaulting of the N. organ loft over the choir, where scenes in his life and martyrdom are portrayed; they are, however, partly concealed by the organ. These, perhaps, the oldest mosaics in the church, were largely restored in 1879 by the Venezia-Murano Company. Opposite, to the S., on the vaulting, is most quaintly told how the body of the saint came to Venice. The designers are very frank in their story of the Translation of the body. E. side (1) The body is stolen (furenter) from Alexandria. (2) The Venetian captains bear the body to their ship in a basket and cry "Kanzir, kanzir" (Pork, pork), to warn off curious officials. (3) The body is wrapped in a sail on the ship: the deluded Mahometan customs officers are departing. W. side (4) The ship on her way to Venice; St Mark warns the sailors to save the ship from destruction. (5) The Doge and clergy receive the body in state on the arrival of the ship at Venice.

Venice and its Story

The Baptistery, commonly referred to as the Chiesa dei Putti (church of the little children) by the chroniclers, and the Zeno Chapel, entered from the right aisle, originally formed part of the atrium. The mosaics in the former were executed by the order of Doge Andrea Dandolo (1343-54), but have been partly restored by the Venezia-Murano Company. In the lunette above the altar is the Crucifixion; weeping angels hover over the cross; L., are the Virgin and St Mark; R., St John the Evangelist and St John the Baptist; at the foot of the cross kneels Doge Andrea Dandolo; at the extreme ends kneel his Grand Chancellor, Rialano Caresini, and a Senator. The table of the altar is formed of a massive block of Egyptian granite from which Christ is said to have preached, brought from the siege of Tyre in 1126. In the centre of the cupola above is Christ enthroned; below is a ten-winged angel bearing on his breast the

S. GIORGIO MAGGIORE

Venice and its Story

Mark is told below on either side. (1) On the E. wall St Mark writes his gospel. (2) St Peter approves the gospel and takes it to be read in the church. (3) St Mark baptises at Aquileia. (4) St Mark on his journey from Aquileia to Rome falling asleep in his boat, is driven by a storm to the lagoons: from a patch of blue sky an angel announces to St Mark that some time after his death his body should be honoured on that spot. The boat is tied to a stake among the reeds. (5) St Peter confers the patriarchate of Aquileia on St Hermagorus. (6) St Mark leaves Rome for Egypt: he preaches and casts out evil spirits there. (7) On the W. wall St Mark in a vision at Pentapolis is ordered by an angel to go to Alexandria. (8) St Mark arrives at Alexandria. The famous Pharos or lighthouse is shown. (9) He heals the cobbler, Anianus, of a wound made by an awl. (10) He is arrested by the Saracens while celebrating mass; smitten with a club; and dragged by chains through the city to the shambles. (11) His body is entombed by the faithful.

In the arch below are some quaint mutilated early reliefs of the nativity and the flight into Egypt. On the ground below are two lions in red Verona marble with their prey. A Byzantine Virgin and child (restored) and angels decorate the half dome towards the Atrium. Below, on either side of the beardless Christ, four figures in marble of the prophets alternate with four others in mosaic.

In the little chapel of the Madonna dei Mascoli,¹

¹ A Guild of men, under the patronage of the Blessed Virgin, and having its meeting-place and altar in the crypt, was, in 1580, compelled to remove thence owing to the infiltration of water. The members were given the chapel of St John for meeting-place, and in 1618 again moved to the Cappella Nuova, which subsequently became known as the formerly known as the Cappella Nuova, due to Bartolomeo Buon, at the W. angle of the N. transept, are the (restored) fifteenth-century mosaics by Michele Giambono (p. 238). (1) The L. vaulting. Birth of the Virgin. (2) The Presentation. (3) Over the altar. The Annunciation. (4) R. Vaulting. The meeting at the Gate Beautiful. (5) The death of the Virgin. In the centre of the vaulting, Virgin and Child between David and Isaiah.

The Basilica of St Mark

East of this is the richly decorated chapel of St Isidore founded by the same Doge and scholar who decorated the Baptistery. The work was not, however, completed until 1355 under Dom. Gradenigo. The inscription over the altar tells that the body of the Blessed Isidore was brought from Chios in 1125 by Doge Dom. Michiel and now rests in the tomb below. The sculptured figure of the saint and the reliefs to left and right representing his martyrdom are fine work. The fourteenth-century mosaics so faithfully wrought by the artists of that great epoch have needed but slight repair and remain practically as they left them. Over the altar is Christ seated between S. Mark and Isidore, and balancing this at the opposite end are the Virgin and Child, the Baptist and St Nicholas. The legend of the saint begins on the wall R. of the altar. (1) Upper part. Isidore and his companion Amenio sail for Chios. (2) They arrive and are entertained by Valeria and her daughter Afria. (3) They give thanks for safe arrival. (4) Isidore casts out a devil. (5) Valeria and Afria converted. (6) Baptism of Afria. (7) Lower part. Isidore condemned to death by King Anumerianus. (8) He is cast into a fiery furnace and not consumed. (9) He is dragged along the ground by horses. (10) He is beheaded. Cappella dei Mascoli. The rule excluding women was, however, repealed in 1476 owing to paucity of members.

Venice and its Story

(11) On the L. wall, the further end from altar above: The burial of Isidore. (12) Arrival of Doge Domenico Michiel at Chios. (13) Cerbanus the priest steals the body. (14) The Doge reproves him. (15) The body is carried to the ship. (16) Below this: Its arrival at Venice and solemn deposition in St Mark's. The mummified body is most realistic. In this chapel we are standing within part of the actual fabric of the old church of St Theodore. When the S. wall of the chapel was peeled in 1832 it was found to be blackened by exposure to the weather and pierced by a window with an iron grille.

The group of worshippers ever before the altar to the left, as the visitor leaves this chapel, will tell him that he is approaching the shrine of the Virgin. Under a canopy is the miraculous Nicopeian icon of the Madonna which was captured from Murzuphles and formed part of the spoil of Constantinople. Doge Dandolo sent it to Venice in a specially appointed ship, and in 1618 the present altar was raised by Doge Giovanni Bembo. The image (only exposed on Saturdays) was traditionally painted by St Luke; it is lavishly decorated with precious stones and surrounded by ex-votos.

Passing the altar of St Paul, erected by Doge Moro, and bearing a statue of the saint and a fine relief of the scene of his blindness, the chapel of St Peter is reached. In front is a screen with statues of the Virgin and Child and four women saints by the Massegne. In the apse of this chapel is the entrance to the Sacristy, one of the most beautiful chambers in Europe (p. 241). The magnificent mosaic ceiling designed by Titian and wrought with rare art; the rich marble decorations; the symmetry and proportion of the architecture; the chastened glow of colour will not fail to impress the spectator.

The Basilica of St Mark

Beyond the altar of St Paul is the great N. pulpit, one of the finest architectural features in the church and rich in historical memories. Here Enrico Dandolo and other great Doges and prelates addressed the people in national crises. Another pulpit smaller and simpler in style stands to the S. of the choir screen, and an altar to St James, due also to the piety of Doge Moro, balances that to St Paul on the N. Both these altars are attributed by Cattaneo, who believed that Tuscan artists had a larger share in the decoration of St Mark's than is commonly allowed, to Luca della Robbia. Cicognara, however, assigns them to P. Lombardo. On the architrave of the screen stand the crucifix, statues of the Virgin, St Mark and the Twelve Apostles by the Massegne, signed and dated 1394-97. On either side of the choir are three reliefs in bronze by Sansovino, and the great bronze-doors by the same master lead from the L. of the choir to the Sacristy. Four marble columns with reliefs support the canopy of the high altar: the rude timeworn carvings tell the story of the life of the Virgin on the N.E. pillar and the life of Christ on the remaining pillars, reading N.W., S.E. and S.W.

The gorgeous Pala d'Oro, exposed to view on Easter Eve and Day, and St Mark's Eve and Day, may be seen on other days between twelve and two on payment of 50 centesimi. This magnificent example of the goldsmith's art was made to the order of Ordelafo Falier by Byzantine craftsmen at Constantinople in 1105: it was added to and restored by Gothic artists under Pietro Ziani in 1209, and under Andrea Dandolo in 1345. The gold, estimated to weigh thirty, the silver three hundred pounds, is set with some 1200 pearls and a like number of precious stones. Most of the jewels were, however, looted by the French in 1797 and are replaced by inferior modern stones, which may be detected by the fact that they are cut in facets. The upper compartment has in the centre, St Michael surrounded by sixteen medallions of the doctors of the Church. To the L. are three panels: The Feast of Palms, Descent into Limbo, Crucifixion; to the R., other three, the Ascension, Pentecost, Death of the Virgin. The lower and larger compartment is framed on three sides by twenty-seven small panels whose subjects are taken from the lives of St Mark, Christ and the Virgin. In the middle is a large panel with the figure of the seated Christ and four smaller figures of the Evangelists; above are two archangels and two cherubim. On each side of the large panel are two sets of six medallions, the upper and smaller of archangels, the lower and larger of the Apostles. Beneath the figure of Christ in the large panel, are three plaques: the centre contains the figure of the Virgin; L. of her is a crowned figure, which a Latin inscription tells is that of Doge Ordelafo Falier; R. of the Virgin is a crowned figure with a Greek inscription stating it to be the Empress Irene. If, however, the observer will scrutinise the figure of the Doge it will be seen that his head has been substituted for that of the Empress's consort, John Comnenus. On each side of these three central figures are inscriptions which give the history of the Pala d'Oro, and six prophets bearing scrolls. The technique of the gold cloisonné enamels is admirable; they are glorious in colour, partly translucent, and allow the backing of fine gold to shine through.

Venice and its Story

Behind the high altar is the altar of the Holy Cross, adorned with six columns of precious marble, two of which, spiral and semi-transparent, are reputed to have come from Solomon's Temple. The chapel to the S. of the high altar is dedicated to St Clement. Beneath the cornice whence springs the vaulting of the apse is a stern minatory inscription in Latin that met the eye of the Doge, as he entered from the Ducal Palace¹ through an ante-room opening on this chapel. It is now but dimly seen, and runs thus: Love justice, give all men their rights: let the poor and the widow, the ward and the orphan, O Doge, hope for a guardian in thee. Be compassionate to all: let not fear nor hate nor love nor gold betray thee. Thou shalt perish as a flower: dust shalt thou become, and, as thy deeds have been, so after death thy reward shall be. In the S. transept, answering to the Lady Chapel, is the chapel of the Holy Blood, formerly dedicated to St Leonard.

The Basilica of St Mark

The old and new crypts open to the public on St Mark's Day, and at other times on payment of 50 centesimi, are of great interest. In the centre of the new crypt, that of Contarini's church, is the empty tomb, reaching to the roof, where lay St Mark's body from 1094 until 1811, when it was removed to the high altar where it now remains. Three steps, topped by a slab of stone worn by pilgrims' feet, lead to a semi-circular cell with a small window once filled with pierced stone-work. The ancient capitals of the columns of this crypt are of great beauty. The older crypt with its rude brick vaulting that formed part of the ninth-century basilica of Giovanni Participazio, was drained and cleared of rubbish, as the inscription tells, in 1890.

The chief object of interest in the Treasury, entered at the W. angle of the S. transept, is the so-called chair of St Mark, probably Egyptian work of the sixth or seventh century, wrought from a block of Cipollino marble, and said to have been sent to Aquileia from Alexandria by the Empress Helena and to have been carried thence with the other relics to Grado at the time of the Lombard invasion. Some beautiful book-covers from St Sophia; a number of Byzantine chalices made of precious stones; two fine candelabri attributed to Cellini; a ring used at the Wedding of the Adriatic, are among the exhibits. The Treasury was looted at the same time as the Pala d'Oro by the French. The room itself, outside the fabric of the church, is of interest inasmuch as it originally formed part of the tower of the old Ducal Palace, and the body of St Mark is said to have lain there from 829 until 832, when the church was ready to receive it.

¹ The private passage from the Ducal Palace to St Mark's was closed in 1700.

Venice and its Story

Before we quit the interior, the old rich mosaic pavement with its quaint and beautiful Byzantine designs is worth notice. The uneven, wavy form is due, not to any intent of imitating the waves of the sea, but to the fact that the pavement is supported by a vaulted¹ substructure, probably to keep the church dry, and has settled, owing to the pressure of the feet of worshippers during the course of centuries, into hollows corresponding to the pockets of arches which, being filled with loose material, are less rigid than the crowns where no settlement takes place.

NOTE.—In view of the alarmist reports which have recently appeared in the English and American press concerning the present condition of the fabric of St Mark's, a brief summary of the official report to the Italian Government drawn up by the architect of the basilica, Manfredo Manfredi, with the assistance of the engineer Luigi Maragoni, and dated May 31, 1904, will be of interest. We may premise that ever since the sixteenth century when Sansovino strengthened the domes of the basilica, the Procurators have been repeatedly pre-occupied with the state of the fabric. In 1657, 1660, 1675 repairs were ordered, and in 1683 the central cupola was found to be in so dangerous a state that reconstruction became imperative; four years later the north cupola was similarly treated and in 1690 the architect reported that the west dome was in danger of collapse and must be repaired forthwith. In 1709 the archivolt above the high altar fell, wreaking much damage, and in 1721 Zandrini warned the Procurators that the Apocalypse and Paradiso vaults of the west end were in a menacing condition, whereupon a restoration was ordered. In 1846 this same vaulting was again in urgent need of repairs and the Zuccati mosaics were largely destroyed in the subsequent restoration. During all this period operations were confined to the fabric above ground, and the main cause of the disintegration—the slow but persistent sinking of the soil on which Venice is built (p. 276) and the consequent weakening of the foundations—was ignored. In the borings made some years since for artesian wells it was found that, below the firm bed of clay, at a depth of from ten to sixteen feet, on which the buildings of Rialto are based, there follow strata of sand and gravel; peat, clay, sand, peat, and so on in regular succession, clearly demonstrating the geological history of the lagoons.

¹ Mr Phené Spiers informs me that when he examined the substructure in 1892 he found the depth of the vaulting under the transept to be about four feet.

The Basilica of St Mark

The restorations made towards the end of the last century did, however include the partial strengthening of the foundations of the north and south façades, and the experts find that it is precisely the portions of the north façade at the St Alippo corner (opposite the Merceria) and at the corner by the Patriarchal Palace which are in most urgent need of attention, as is indeed obvious even to the lay eye by the evident bias of the former corner, which is probably saved from collapse only by an iron support applied in 1780 and now subject to immense strain. Many indications in the interior—gaps between pilasters and walls; want of perpendicularity in the massive brick piers that carry the great dome, and a curious torsion in the dome itself; a like phenomenon in the dome of the choir; the obliquity of the apse—all indicate, to use the expert's words, a "grave decrepitude" of the whole fabric beneath the marble and mosaic decorations. There is, however, no cause for any pessimistic or alarmist views as to the fate of the priceless edifice. The admirable restorations of the great dome affected by Zandrini in 1721-1729 have preserved it for nearly two centuries; the discovery of some ingenious contrivance to strengthen one of the tribunes, which must have been applied not later than the end of the sixteenth century; the examination of the Apocalypse and Paradiso vaulting, which again is in need of repair, and of the adjacent west dome, have demonstrated that the processes of deformation and of decay are very slow: Moreover, it should be remembered that the experts base their report on a careful inspection of the whole fabric extending over a period of two years; that they aim at stirring the authorities to immediate action, and that governments are hard to move when it is a question of spending a few thousands on the preservation of monuments of art rather than lavishing millions on the machinery of wholesale slaughter and destruction. The irreparable loss by fire of the Turin library was the result of a refusal to grant a small subvention to the curators, who foresaw the danger from the cheap electric installation and prayed that improvements might be authorised: a careful technical examination of the electric wires in St Mark's is among the preventative measures advised by the authors of the report.

Venice and its Story

The vast and comprehensive scheme proposed by the experts includes: The radical restoration and partial reconstruction of the Apocalypse and Paradiso Vaulting; the restoration of the great west window and the strengthening of the west dome by fixing a second girdle of iron round the drum; the strengthening of the four tribunes of the interior; the restoration of the St Alippo angle, including the sixteenth-century sundial and the old clockwork and bell, and the strengthening of the foundations of both the northern corners; the repair and re-leading of the external wooden framework of the central and choir domes. These urgent repairs and the restoration of portions of the decorative work, including the bronze doors and the pulpits, are estimated to cost £6123, 4s. The experts further advise the ultimate stripping of the whole marble incrustation in order to examine the state of the walls; the overhauling of all the metal supports; the careful observation of the movements taking place in the central and choir domes and the adoption of temporary measures for their security; the complete restoration of the interior pavement, taking warning, however, by the deplorable example of the renewed portion in the north aisle, using so far as possible the old tesserae, and, where the use of new material is absolutely necessary, to see that such material be chosen with patient care and prepared by hand; the formation of a museum to contain and exhibit the ancient work still hidden away in the cathedral depôts and any other which unavoidable (ineluctabile) necessity may render impossible of utilisation in the proposed restoration; the ancient mosaics still in the possession of the authorities to be reset in their original positions whence they have been removed in comparatively recent times to give place to new and inferior work. From this sketch of an exhaustive and voluminous report it will be seen that those responsible for the preservation of the magnificent and unique architecture of St Marks are alive to their responsibility and conscious of the artistic principles which should govern the restoration of ancient monuments in whose loving and intelligent conservation the whole civilised world is interested.

The Basilica of St Mark

SECTION III

The Ducal Palace—(open week-days 9-3, 1 franc 20 c.; Sundays, 10-2, free). The Royal Palace—(open Thursdays and Sundays, 10-4, free; other days, 2.30-5, on personal application).

To turn from the fair temple of the Christian faith in Venice, warm with the affection and the presence of her people, to the empty splendour of the Palace where her secular princes sat in state, is to turn from life to death. If a patrician of the great days were to revive and enter St Mark's he would find the same hierarchy, the same ritual, the same prayers and praise uttered in the same language to the God he knew. But if he sought to enter the Ducal Palace, the servant of a then petty dynasty would demand a silver coin before he were permitted to ascend the Golden Staircase, and there, on steps once trod by those alone whose names were inscribed in the Book of Gold, he would meet a strange company. He would find the great palace of Venice a museum; her millennial power a memory; and the gorgeous halls that once echoed to the voices of the masters of land and sea occupied by a crowd of sightseers, alien in race and creed, gazing curiously at the faded emblems and pictures which tell of her pride, her glory and her imperial state.

Venice and its Story

The earliest official residence of the Tribunes of Rivoalto was situated by the church of the Holy Apostles near the Rio dei Gesuiti, whose northern mouth is opposite the channel leading to Murano. The remains of this fortified building, which was furnished with a great gate, always kept closed, and a guarded postern, still existed towards the end of the sixteenth century, and then served as a prison. In 820, Doge Angelo Participazio built another feudal-like structure on the site of the present Ducal Palace, near the church of St Theodore. Nothing could be less like the palazzo fabbricato in aria we know to-day. A stout fortress, it and the whole of the Piazza, then but a third of its present area, were enclosed by a strong wall with Ghibelline battlements. One of the old towers is incorporated in the masonry, at whose corner now stand the four figures in porphyry referred to on p. 290.

Angelo's structure was destroyed by fire during the riots which attended the murder of Doge Pietro Candiano in 976. The rebuilding was undertaken by his successor, Pietro Orseolo, and completed towards the end of the eleventh century by Doge Selvo, who adorned the exterior with marble columns and the interior with mosaics. Doge Sebastiano Ziani extended the buildings in the late twelfth century. About 1327 the chief mason (prototaiapiera), Pietro Basseggio, furnished designs for further reconstruction, and the E. portion of the S. façade was begun, Pietro probably entrusting the execution of the sculptural decorations to Filippo Calendario,¹ who is known from a MS. in the Museo Civico, to have been the most excellent sculptor of his day. In the course of about half a century the S. wing was completed and the W. façade carried as far as the boundary of Ziani's building. In 1365 Doge Marco Cornaro had the walls of the Great Council Hall, the necessity for which had been the chief cause of the new buildings, painted with scenes from the story of the reconciliation of Pope Alexander and the Emperor Barbarossa, and the cornice decorated with portraits of the Doges so arranged that his own came exactly over the ducal chair. The fourteenth-century Gothic additions made the simple edifice of Ziani look poor in comparison, and a strong desire was evoked to rebuild the old palace; but the Senate, chary of adding to the public burdens, forbade any member to make such a proposal under a fine of 1000 ducats. In 1419 fire injured the old edifice, and the good Doge Tomaso Mocenigo offered to pay the fine, and thus carried a proposal to rebuild Ziani's portion of the Palace, which reached from the present Porta della Carta to the sixth arch and seventh column N. of the Adam and Eve angle. The Gothic building was completed between 1424 and 1439, under Doge Francesco Foscari, whose kneeling figure (restored) is carved over the Porta. The ornate renaissance façade on the east side, best seen from a gondola, or from the Ponte di Canonico, is by Antonio Riccio, and was erected between 1483 and 1500. The brick core of the palace may still be seen in the Cortile and on eastern façade, where Riccio's beautiful work ends.

¹ Calendario was a relative of Doge Marino Faliero and shared his fate: he was hanged between the red columns of the balcony of the palace.

The Ducal Palace

After the great fire of 1577, when the conflagration seemed "like Etna in eruption," the whole structure narrowly escaped demolition to make place for a new building of Palladian architecture. The strenuous opposition of the architects Giovanni Rusconi and Antonio da Ponte alone saved it; the latter's plans were accepted; the ruin was repaired and for the third time the immense area of the interior walls was redecorated. The Bridge of Sighs is a later addition by Ant. Contino, about 1600. It is a commonplace structure, and none but commonplace criminals ever crossed it to their doom.

The sculptures at the three free angles, the Drunkenness of Noah, the Adam and Eve, and the Judgment of Solomon are placed S.E., S.W. and N.W. The group of the Judgment of Solomon is by two Tuscan sculptors, somewhat arbitrarily identified by Zanotto as Pietro di Nicolo di Firenze and Giovanni di Martino da Fiesole, who wrought the Mocenigo tomb in S. Zanipolo (p. 368).

The S. façade, like the W., is composed of a lower arcade and an upper gallery whose columns support the massive walls of the upper storeys, a daring inversion of architectural tradition which is not wholly satisfying, although the marble lozenge-shaped incrustation relieves the heaviness. Indeed, from a fourteenth-century drawing¹ in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, it is possible the upper storeys may have been originally set back. The squat appearance of the columns of the arcade is due to the raising of the level of the Piazzetta, which in the days when the palace was built was some thirty inches below the present pavement.² The original building was approached by a stylobate of three steps which greatly added to its dignity and proportion. Under this arcade the Venetian nobility were accustomed to meet and talk of public affairs, for meetings in their own houses would have roused the suspicion of the Ten. When the patricians, as they paced up and down, raised their eyes to the capitals just above their heads, they saw a series of sculptures which for beauty of design, richness of invention and craftsmanship were unsurpassed in Europe. Even to-day, largely renewed as they are, they will repay careful inspection. The subjects are of the usual symbolical types: children, birds, famous emperors and kings, the virtues and sins, the signs of the Zodiac, the crafts, the seven ages of man under celestial influences, the months and seasons, famous lawgivers—all treated with the naïveté and didactic purpose so characteristic of Gothic artists. Most of the carvings bear inscriptions which make the interpretation of the subjects comparatively easy, those on the Capital at the Justice of Solomon angle being especially noteworthy: the group of Trajan and the Widow corresponds to the version of this popular mediæval story given by Dante.¹ The renewed columns on the W. façade, counting from the Judgment of Solomon angle, are Nos. 1, 2, 3, 10, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, which is the Adam and Eve angle. The Capitals renewed are 10, 12, 16, 17, 18, 19. How skilfully the work has been done the traveller may easily convince himself by trying to distinguish the seven columns and seven Capitals which have been renewed on the S. façade. The restoration of the Ducal Palace has been admirably done, and is said to have satisfied even Ruskin himself.

¹ Reproduced in Parker's "Introduction to Gothic Architecture," ninth Edition, p. 296.

² During the excavations made in 1903 round the foundations of the fallen Campanile the old brick paving was clearly seen.

The Ducal Palace

The gallery above is beyond criticism; for originality and grace it is unique in Europe. The eye never tires of its beauty; it adds distinction to the whole structure, and it gives an element of peaceful repose and conscious security so markedly in contrast to the grim civic fortresses of Florence and Siena and other faction-ridden Italian States. The four raised windows of the main storey on the S. are due to the fact that the builders of the Hall of the Great Council cared less for external symmetry than for internal convenience. The two balconied windows, one in each façade, were added soon after the completion of the Porta della Carta. Before 1577 all the windows of the great chamber were decorated with Gothic triforia. It is now proposed to restore them, though the project meets with much opposition. The two red columns in the W. Gallery were transferred from the earlier palace and are probably those from which Calendario and some other state criminals were hanged.

¹ Purgatorio, x. 76-93.

Venice and its Story

We pass through the Porta della Carta, enter the Cortile and turn to examine Riccio's famous statues of Adam and Eve opposite the Giant's Staircase. The inner façade was begun on the E. side by Riccio and continued by Pietro Lombardo and Scarpagnino. The two cisterns of bronze are fine Renaissance work of 1556-57. At the top of the stately Scala dei Giganti stand Sansovino's statues of Mars and Neptune: here, between the two pagan deities, the later Doges were crowned. The Doge stood surrounded by the electors, and was acclaimed by the people below in the courtyard; a line of ducal guards kept the staircase.

We mount¹ the Scala d'Oro to the chambers where the rulers of the Republic held their meetings. Nearly the whole of the architectural decorations and paintings we shall see are later than 1577, when the disastrous fire occurred which destroyed the priceless works of Gentile da Fabriano, Vittore Pisano and the Bellini. With few exceptions they are all by the later Venetian masters, characterised by vigour and breadth of treatment rather than careful execution and reverent feeling. It was a time when the rulers of Venice, their initiative and courage gone, lived on the traditions of a great past, for Lepanto was but a magnificent episode. In few cases was the artist contemporary with the events he depicted. The paintings do, however, enable us to realise the costumes and architecture of the declining Venice of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. They have suffered much at the hands of the restorer. When Goethe was examining Titian's Death of Peter Martyr in S. Zanipolo in 1790, a Dominican friar addressed him and asked if he would like to see the artists at work above. There in the monastery he found an academy of picture restorers established by the Republic working under a director on the paintings of the Ducal Palace. In 1846 Ruskin saw a picture by Paul Veronese, lying on the floor of a room in the palace, in process of restoration; the restorer was working on the head of a white horse, using a brush fixed at the end of a five-foot stick which he dipped into a common house-painter's pot.

¹ On free days the entrance is by the farther Scala dei Censori.

The Ducal Palace

In the vestibule (Atrio Quadrato) is a fine ceiling-painting by Tintoretto, Doge Lorenzo Priuli receiving the Sword of State from the Hands of Justice, one of a series of allegorical and devotional pictures, the main feature being the portrait of the Doge, which we shall meet with again and again in the decoration of the Palace. The walls are hung with portraits of Procurators of St Mark by the same master, who was their official portrait painter. To the R. is the Hall of the Four Doors (Sala delle Quattro Porte), designed by Palladio. On the R. wall is a late work by Titian, Doge Antonio Grimani kneeling before Faith, a beautiful creation: the figures on either side are by his nephew Marco Vecelli. The picture was in Titian's studio at the time of his death and thus escaped the fate that befell his other paintings in the Palace, which, including the magnificent historic composition known as the Battle of Cadore, perished in the fires of 1574 and 1577. Opposite the Titian is the Reception of Henry III. of France, a contemporary painting by Vicentino: Palladio's triumphal arch is seen in picture. Other historical and allegorical scenes cover the remaining walls.

Venice and its Story

The door opposite the entrance leads to a small ante-room (Anti-Collegio) containing some of the most charming pictures in the palace—Tintoretto's Ariadne and Bacchus, Minerva repelling Mars, and Mercury with the Graces, painted 1578. Sensuous beauty and poetry of line are their main qualities. A famous painting by Veronese, The Rape of Europa, and Jacopo Bassano's Return of Jacob are on the wall opposite the windows. A foreshadowing of modern naturalism in the treatment of the sheep and the horse in the last picture is especially noteworthy. We now enter the room where the Signory received foreign ambassadors (Sala del Collegio). Over the entrance is a portrait of Doge Andrea Gritti kneeling before the Virgin; over the door of exit, the Marriage of St Catherine, with a ceremonial portrait of Doge Francesco Donà, elaborated with the usual accessories, the figure of the Doge's name saint (in this case St Francis) is common to all these compositions; to the L. is a portrait of Doge Nicolo da Ponte, with the Virgin in glory; farther on, Doge Alvise Mocenigo adoring the Saviour. All these are by Tintoretto; the figures of the Virgin and St Catherine in the second and third of these pictures are from his favourite model and in his most gracious manner. Over the throne, Doge Sebastiano Venier returning Thanks for the Victory of Lepanto, is by Veronese. The ceiling, designed by Ant. da Ponte and painted by Veronese in his most grandiose style, is considered by Ruskin to be the finest in the palace. Parallel to the last two rooms is the Senate-hall (Sala del Senato). The paintings here are of but secondary interest: ceremonial portraits of Doges by Palma Giovane, Marco Vecelli and Tintoretto. The poor composition over the door is symbolical of the defeat of the League of Cambrai. The central panel of the gorgeous ceiling—Venice, Queen of the Sea—is by Domenico Tintoretto, son of Jacopo. A door R. of the dais gives access to the vestibule of the Doge's private chapel (Anti-Chiesetta). Here are the two pictures painted by Tintoretto for the Camerlenghi in 1552; over the entrance door, SS. Jerome and Andrew; opposite, St Louis of Toulouse and St George. Two early Madonnas in the chapel¹ are doubtfully attributed to the schools of Boccacino and Bellini. Christ in Limbo and the Israelites crossing the Red Sea are attributed by Mr Berenson to Previtali. These and other paintings in the chapel afford fruitful themes for critical ingenuity.

DOGE'S PALACE—THE CORTILE

Venice and its Story

Returning through the Senate-hall we cross the Sala delle Quattro Porte, and traverse a small ante-room to the Hall of the Ten (Sala del Consiglio dei Dieci). On the entrance wall is painted, by Leandro Bassano, Pope Alexander III. greeting Doge Ziani after the (legendary) victory over Barbarossa. The ceiling pictures are by Veronese and his pupils: an oval panel, The Elder and the Fair Lady, is a famous painting by the master. We enter next the ante-room of the three Inquisitors of State (Sala della Bussola), formerly a guardroom occupied by the captain of the police and by the guards of the Ten. An opening in the wall was formerly decorated with a lion's head in marble (bocca del leone). Here secret denunciations were placed from the outside. The delators would ascend the Scala dei Censori and cast their accusations in the opening on the L. at the top of the staircase. The custom of receiving secret information was common in the Republic. To this day similar bocche di leoni remain in various parts of Venice—on the Zattere, for denunciations of breaches of sanitary regulations with the inscription DNICIE CONTRA LA SANITA PER IL SESTIERE DE OSSODVRO; another in front of St Martin's Church near the arsenal invites secret denunciations against blasphemers and brawlers in churches.

¹ The chapel is now (1904) shut off by a partition, and entered by a door L. of the dais in the Senate-hall.

The Ducal Palace

To the R. of the Sala della Bussola is a small chamber (Stanza dei tre Capi del Consiglio) where sat the three chiefs of the Ten. The room contains a simple, refreshing picture by Catena, Doge Leonardo Loredano kneeling and presented by St Mark to the Virgin; a St Christopher by Bonifazio; a Pietà by Giovanni Bellini, hard and realistic in treatment; and portraits of three Senators, by Tintoretto. Returning to the Sala della Bussola (the Sala dei Inquisitori di Stato is not shown), we descend the Scala dei Censori to the lower floor. Here we enter the immense Hall of the Great Council (Sala del Maggior Consiglio), on which the later artists of the Republic lavished all their powers of sumptuous decoration. The entrance wall over the throne is covered by Tintoretto's famous *Paradiso*¹—a tremendous conception which at first almost dazes the spectator by its daring, then leaves a profound impression of the master's gigantic but unchastened power. After patient contemplation, groups and individuals stand out from the bewildering crowd of figures—Christ and the Virgin in glory; the Archangels; the Intelligences that preside over the heavenly spheres; the Evangelists with their symbols; prophets, saints and martyrs, an exultant host, treated with originality and force, sometimes even with tender grace. But the composition is too vast; it lacks symmetry, and Domenico's feebler hand is all too evident in parts. The eye wearies of seeing, and none but admirers of the *più terribile cervello che abbia mai avuto la pittura*¹ will care to read the canvas in all its details. Tintoretto was seventy-five years of age when commissioned to execute the work. Ruskin estimated the number of figures to be not less than 500. To L. and R. the walls are filled with scenes from the heroic times of Venetian history. Here again the crowded canvases, the conscious straining after effect weary the spectator, and few are they who do not soon turn from detailed examination of the pictures, to rest eye and brain on the beautiful scene that opens out from the loggia on the south side of the hall—the island of S. Giorgio; the Giudecca; the waters laughing in the sun; the peaceful lagoon; the Lido far away with its line of trees.

¹ This has now (1905) been removed for restoration and the Guariento fresco behind is being carefully peeled.

Venice and its Story

The series of paintings on the N. wall represent scenes, mainly legendary, in the story of Pope Alexander III. and the Emperor Barbarossa, mostly by inferior artists. The S. wall is decorated with scenes in the epic story of the conquest of Constantinople under Enrico Dandolo; a single canvas, at the end of the hall opposite the Paradiso, by Veronese, has for its subject the return of Doge Contarini after the defeat of the Genoese at Chioggia. The panels of the magnificent ceiling were painted by Veronese, Tintoretto, Palma Giovane and F. Bassano. Veronese's Apotheosis of Venice and Tintoretto's Doge Nicolo da Ponte with the Senate and envoys from conquered cities paying homage to Venice are stupendous works of their kind. On the frieze are portraits, mostly imaginary, of seventy-six Doges, by Tintoretto and his assistants, the place of Marino Falier being filled by a black tablet with the inscription: Hic est locus Marini Faletri decapitati pro criminibus.

¹ "The most terrific brain that ever applied itself to painting" (Vasari).

The Ducal Palace

A door to the R. leads to the Hall of the Scrutineers (Sala dello Scrutinio). This, which almost rivals the Hall of the Great Council for magnificence, was the chamber where the Doges and other officers of State were elected. The S. end is filled with an ambitious Last Judgment by Palma Giovane, in which that very second-rate artist tried to emulate Tintoretto's Paradise. The E. and W. walls are decorated with scenes in the history of Venice of small artistic merit. When Garibaldi was at the Ducal Palace, his attention was arrested by the resemblance to himself of the figure of Admiral Sebastiano Venier in Vicentino's Battle of Lepanto. The Recapture of Zara in 1346 is by Tintoretto. Thirty-nine portraits of Doges complete the line from the Hall of the Great Council, ending on the W. wall with Ludovico Manin. At the N. end is the monument to Doge Francesco Morosini.

We retrace our steps to the Scala dei Censori, beyond which is a suite of rooms, once the private apartments of the Doges, and now used as an archaeological museum. In the corridor are two fine allegorical pictures of St Mark's Lion by Jacobello del Fiore and Carpaccio; and Bartolomeo Buoni's remarkable head of Francesco Foscari¹ (p. 228). The beautiful rooms with their gilded ceilings, and fine chimney-pieces by the Lombardi, contain Greek, Roman and Venetian sculpture, Renaissance bronzes, ¹ The features are of course over-emphasised, as the statue was originally placed some distance from the spectator over the Porta della Carta.

Venice and its Story

coins, old maps and other objects, many of them of high merit, but only of interest to the more leisured student. In the Stanza degli Stucchi are a voting urn from the Scuola della Carità, and another from the Great Council. Before he leaves this room the visitor should ask to be shown one of the most interesting paintings in the palace—an unrestored fresco by Titian of St Christopher, with a view of Venice in the bottom background—at the foot of the staircase leading up to the Doge's chapel. The Piombi have long since disappeared owing to structural alterations; such of the Pozzi and other cells that are shown may well be left unvisited.

Before descending the Giant's Staircase, permission may be had, on application to the "Ufficio Regionale per la Conservazione dei Monumenti del Veneto," to inspect the "Cobden Madonna" at the E. end of the S. gallery overlooking the Grand Canal. It is a fine marble relief of the Virgin and Child with attendant angels, wrought probably by Pietro Lombardo to commemorate the reduction of the duties on corn during a severe famine in the reign of one of the Mocenighi towards the end of the fifteenth century.¹ When Richard Cobden was in Venice in 1847, during the course of his triumphant journey through Europe, he wrote his name, which is still visible, over one of the ears of corn beneath the Latin inscription. The priceless collection of books formerly in the library of the Ducal Palace, including the famous Grimani Breviary, has been removed to the Zecca, and may be seen daily from 9-3. Entrance free.

The Royal Palace, on the opposite side of the Piazzetta, contains, among other pictures, two of

¹ Copies of this interesting relief may be obtained of Pietro Zorzetto, photographer, 3024 Calle stretta, Gallipoli, near the Frari.

The Accademia

Tintoretto's S. Marco series (p. 332)—The Translation of the Body of St Mark from Alexandria and the Saint descending to rescue a Saracen from drowning. The Bonifazio Virgin and Child with SS. John, Barbara and Omobono (1533) is probably wholly by the master's hand. In the ante-room of the Libreria Vecchia is an admirable ceiling composition, Wisdom, painted by Titian in the fulness of his powers. The decorations of the Large Hall were executed under Titian's superintendence (1556-1557) by Veronese, Schiavone, Salviati and other artists.

SECTION IV

The Accademia (open week-days 9-3, 1 franc; Sundays 10-2, free).

AFTER the fall of the Venetian Republic the French government expropriated a group of buildings belonging to the church, monastery and guild of S. Maria della Carità, and there housed the collection of paintings selected from the public offices, the suppressed religious orders, guilds and churches of Venice, by their commissioner, Peter Edwards, who had formerly been chief picture restorer to the Republic. Some conception may be formed, after visiting the Ducal Palace and the magnificent collection treasured in these rooms, of the enormous wealth of paintings existing in the city in the latter half of the eighteenth century; for the commission then appointed to overhaul the artistic possessions of the government decided to restore only the best and allowed the remainder to rot.

The steamers that ply along the Grand Canal will land the visitor at the Accademia pier by the foot of the iron bridge that spans the Canal. Opposite are the buildings of the Guild of Our Lady of Charity, the earliest of the six greater Scuole¹ of Venice: it was founded in 1260 to ransom Christian captives from the Moors and other pirates. Over the portal of the outer cloister are three early reliefs in stone, St Leonard, patron of captives and slaves; the Virgin and Child with kneeling guildsmen; and St Christopher. In the inner court, entered from the corridor of the Istituto delle Belle Arti, may be seen Palladio's unfinished cloisters, one of the most beautiful examples of the use of brick in N. Italy. Of the old rooms of the guild two only remain in the Accademia, Room XX., the former Guest Chamber, and Room I. Both have magnificent fifteenth-century ceilings; that of the latter is by Giampietro of Vicenza, a famous wood-carver whose figures of eight-winged cherubs have been ingeniously but erroneously interpreted as a rebus on the name of a supposed brother, Cherubino Aliotto (eight-winged), who was believed to have paid for the decoration of the ceiling. We enter which is devoted to the earliest Venetian masters. Here are two excellent examples of Jacobello del Fiore's work painted in the first half of the fifteenth century. No. 1, an altar-piece, the Coronation of the Virgin, with choirs of angels, the four Evangelists, prophets and saints: the donor, the Bishop of Ceneda, kneels in the foreground. No. 15 is a grand official composition painted in 1421 for the Tribunal of Justice at the Ducal Palace. In the centre is the figure of Justice between two lions; on either side are the ¹ (1) The Carità, (2) S. Giovanni Evangelista, (3) The Misericordia, (4) S. Marco, (5) S. Rocco, (6) S. Teodoro.

Venice and its Story

ROOM I

The Accademia

archangels Michael and Gabriel; each figure has an appropriate inscription in Latin couplets. 3 is a signed guild picture, painted about the middle of the fifteenth century by Giambono, who executed the mosaics in the chapel of the Mascoli at St Mark's. 5, 9 and 10 are by Lorenzo Veneziano. The last is a magnificent altar-piece from the church of S. Antonio di Castello, demolished to make the Public Gardens. It is divided into eighteen compartments. In the centre is the Annunciation; near is the kneeling donor, Domenico Leon. L.¹ are SS. Francis, Dominic, Mary Magdalen, John the Evangelist; R., SS. Anthony the hermit, John the Baptist, Paul and Peter. The figure of the Father above is a portion of a later work (p. 335) by Benedetto Diana. Thirty-six small figures of saints are in the pilasters; five hermit saints in the predella. Three hundred gold ducats (about £150) were paid for the picture. Lorenzo was working in the latter half of the fourteenth century. No. 18, the Virgin with devotees, is by Simone da Cusighe, a later contemporary. On the L. and R. panels are realistic scenes from the life of St Bartholomew. An inscription on 19 states that it was painted in 1394 by Nicholas, son of Master Peter of Venice, who lived at the head of the Ponte Paradiso. 21 is a typical fourteenth-century work painted under Byzantine traditions by an unknown Venetian. On the sides are scenes from the life of Christ; above, scenes from the life of St Francis. 24, a rich altar-piece from the secularised church of St Helena, is the work of a Bolognese, Michele da Matteo, who was painting about the middle of the fifteenth century. Above is the Crucifixion with the four Evangelists; below, a frieze with figures of saints; in the centre, the Virgin and Child, with angels. L., SS. Helena and Lucy. R., SS. Mary Magdalen and Catherine of Alexandria. The softened outlines of the Virgin's face and the gorgeous mediæval costumes are specially noteworthy. The predella tells the story of the Invention of the Cross and the miracles wrought by it. 26 is another interesting work by an unknown fourteenth-century master; six small panels with scenes from the Passion and Last Judgment. 28 is a later work (1500) by Andrea da Murano, a pupil of Bart. Vivarini. 29, 30 and 659 are by Quirizio da Murano, who was working 1462-1502. 33 is a typical early treatment of the Coronation of the Virgin. Beneath the enthroned Virgin, angels bear the instruments of the Passion. Yet lower are the four Evangelists and chief doctors of the Church. Companies of saints are at either side of the throne. The attribution to Giovanni Alemano and Antonio Vivarini da Murano is a doubtful one, and the official catalogue assigns the work to Giambono. The signatures and dates on old paintings are frequently nothing more than the guesses of restorers.

¹ Left and right of the spectator.

Venice and its Story

Room II

Before entering this collection of masterpieces, the eye will be arrested by Titian's famous Assumption, which for general effect is best seen from a seat at the end of Room I. 36 is an admirable Cima. The Virgin and Child are enthroned under a classic portico; two angels with musical instruments are at her feet; L., SS. Nicholas, George and Catherine; R., SS. Anthony the hermit, Sebastian and Lucy. The picture was once the altar-piece of the church of S. Maria della Carità. 37, by Veronese, is the same subject treated by one of the latest of the great artists. 38, Giovanni Bellini's Virgin and Saints, was removed with the above from the church of St Giobbe, and is said by Francesco Sansovino to be his first work in oil. According to Vasari, this picture evoked general and lasting admiration. L., are SS. Job, Francis and John the Baptist; R., SS. Sebastian, Dominic and Augustine. An opportunity is afforded by the juxtaposition of these altar-pieces to compare the treatment of the subject by three great masters. 39, Marco Basaiti's Christ calling the Sons of Zebedee,¹ a rather feeble work which ill bears comparison with its neighbours. 40, Titian's Assumption. A nearer view of this grandiose painting will serve to impress the beholder with the animation and force of the master's new style and the subtle artifice by which he attracts the eye of the spectator to the ascending Virgin, to whom the whole composition yearns. This altar-piece aroused great interest when exposed at the Frari² in 1518, pregnant as it was with the future development of the grand school of Venetian painting, with its masterly grouping of a large and complicated subject, its breadth of treatment and habit of massing the warmer and mellower colours of the palette on the canvas. It must be remembered, however, that the picture was intended to be seen in the dim light of a church, and not with a full top light falling upon it, and that the features of the Virgin and the picture generally have been coarsened by restoration, for, unhappily, most of the old paintings which have come down to us have been restored more than once, more than twice, more than thrice, and the traveller will need to make allowances for the consequent debasement of the original creation in this and many other works of the old masters. 41, The Death of Abel, by Tintoretto, is an admired work, powerful but sombre. It is considered by Ruskin to be one of the most wonderful works in the gallery, and superior in many respects to 42, The Miracle of St Mark, the most popular of the master's paintings (p. 263). A Christian slave is tortured and ordered to be executed for his devotion to St Mark, who descends from heaven like lightning to rescue him. The executioner holds up the broken hammer. A work of amazing science and originality, which so perplexed the members of the guild¹ for whom it was executed, and gave rise to so many discussions, that the impatient artist fetched it away and kept it in his atelier until it was better appreciated. 43, Adam and Eve, is an early work by the master. 44, Carpaccio, Presentation in the Temple. The painter wrought the work in emulation of his master's altar-piece, No. 38: All the Bellini features are here—the mosaic half dome, the Renaissance decoration, the sweet boy musicians with instruments almost too big for them to handle. The two paintings adorned the same church.

The Accademia

¹ A smaller replica of this work hangs in the Imperial Museum at Vienna (No. 1).

² Sanudo notes that on May 20, 1518, the panel painted for the high altar of the Minorites church was that day set up.

Venice and its Story

ROOM III

contains a miscellaneous collection of paintings of various Italian schools. The signature Gentile da Fabriano (Fabriensis), on 48, is a forgery.

ROOM IV

contains among other drawings by Italian masters

¹ Four pictures were painted by Tintoretto for the Guild of St Mark. Two, the Carrying of the Body of St Mark from Alexandria and St Mark saving a Saracen, are in the Royal Palace of Venice; the fourth is in the Brera at Milan.

The Accademia

some of Leonardo da Vinci's famous caricatures. The central ceiling panel was designed by Veronese, and executed by his assistants: other panels, the Prodigal Son and allegorical figures of the Virtues, are by Tintoretto.

ROOM V

The dominant genius of the Bellini is strikingly manifest in the works of their contemporaries with which this room is hung. 69, The Agony in the Garden, and 102, St George and the Dragon, are by Basaiti. The former is the finest of his paintings in Venice. 88, The Dead Christ and two Angels; 93, The Presentation; 94, The Virgin and Child with four saints, are excellent examples of Bissolo's manner. In his warm colour and dignified figures he is more nearly akin than Basaiti to his master, Giovanni Bellini. 75, formerly assigned to Carpaccio, is by Mansueti: St Peter presenting the Donor to the Virgin. 76, The Supper at Emmaus, is a remarkable and unique work by Marco Marziale. On either side of the seated Christ are two servants, one of whom is in oriental costume. The two powerfully wrought figures seated at the table betray the dominant influence of Dürer over this painter. 78 and 80 are by Bartolomeo Montagna, a Vicentine painter (1450-1523), influenced by Giovanni Bellini, but expressing himself with much originality. The latter picture, The Virgin and Child enthroned between SS. Sebastian and Jerome, is a good typical work. 166 is by Rocco Marconi: Descent from the Cross. The charming landscape is painted with much care and naturalness. 82, 83 and 84 are by Benedetto Diana. 82, The Virgin and Child enthroned between SS. Jerome, Benedict, Mary Magdalen and Giustina, is the painter's last work; 83 and 84 were once assigned to Catena. 79, Christ presenting the Crown of Thorns to St Catherine of Siena, and showing the crown of gold, her portion in heaven, is one of Bissolo's best works. 89, 90 and 91 are late and indifferent paintings by Carpaccio. The first, The 10,000 Crucified Martyrs of Mount Ararat, has been badly disfigured by repainting: the last, a curious and puzzling subject, is said to commemorate the institution of the holy pilgrimage to Jerusalem. The interior is that of the demolished church of St Anthony the Hermit at Castello. Above, hanging about the walls, are models of galleys and other votive offerings from mariners and their families. 639, a Crucifixion, and 640, a Nativity, are by Previtali. 95, The Visitation, is a doubtful Sebastiano del Piombo, by some critics assigned to Titian. The restorers have effaced the original traits of the painting. 97 is a typical plague picture by Mansueti, St Sebastian between SS. Liberale, Gregory the Pope, Francis and Roch, who lifts his dress to show the plague spot. 100 and 104 are fine paintings by Lazzaro Sebastiani. The latter, St Anthony of Padua enshrined in a tree, beneath which are St Bonaventura and another Franciscan saint, has much puzzled the critics. It is an old custom, however, in Italy, to place shrines with figures of saints in trees by the wayside. We have seen many such when walking in the hill country of Venetia. One of these shrines has suggested the novel treatment of the subject in the picture. 103 and 105 are panels by Crivelli, a native of Venice, but a Paduan in style and feeling. He worked chiefly in the Marches, and Venice is poor in his productions. 103, SS. Ambrose, Jerome, Peter and Paul, are parts of a tryptich, of which the beautiful Madonna with festoons of fruit at Milan (193 in the Brera), is the central panel.

The Accademia

ROOM VI

contains a collection of Dutch pictures of no great merit.

ROOM VII

is devoted mainly to the Friulian painters. The chief attraction of this room is, however, a recent acquisition due to the critical acumen of the Director Signor Cantalamessa, No. 147, a magnificent Sacra Conversazione by Palma Vecchio. It is a late work by the master, and was probably left unfinished at his death. In the centre are the Virgin and Child, with SS. Joseph, Catherine and the Baptist; the background is formed by a beautiful landscape. 70, The Virgin and Child, with the Baptist and St Catherine is of doubtful authorship: Previtali and Cariani have been suggested. 86 is by Benedetto Diana, The Virgin and Child enthroned, with the Baptist SS. Louis of Toulouse and Anna. The figure of the Father in No. 10 formed originally the upper portion of this picture. 99, a Flagellation, was formerly attributed to Catena. It is now assigned to one of the Santacroci. 148 and 150, by Martino da Udine, together form an Annunciation. 151 is the same subject by the same master. Some interesting paintings by Cariani, the Santacroci, and by Martino's pupil, Sebastiano Florigerio, are also worth attention.

ROOM VIII

is hung with Flemish paintings.

ROOM IX

glows with the compositions of the sixteenth-century masters Veronese and Tintoretto. 203, The Supper in the House of Levi (p. 265). Under a spacious

Venice and its Story

Corinthian portico Christ is seated between St John and St Peter; the whole scene is dominated by the princely magnificence of the repast, and the details objected to by the Inquisitor are untouched: Peter is still carving the lamb, and between two columns on the L. is the guest picking his teeth with a fork. 205, 206, 208, 209 are scenes from the story of S. Cristina by the same master. In the first she is taken by her father's order to be cast into Lake Bolsena. In the second she is visited and fed by angels in prison. Third, she refuses to worship Apollo. Fourth, she is bound to a pillar and scourged. 207 is also by Veronese, The Virgin of the Rosary, with Pope, Emperor, kneeling Doge, Senators and ladies to whom St Dominic, the inventor of the devotion of the Rosary, distributes crowns of roses. 210, Tintoretto: An interesting picture, rich in colour, painted for the Palazzo dei Camerlenghi: the Virgin and Child with SS. Mark, Sebastian and Theodore; before her, three officers of the Treasury, followed by their servants, prostrate themselves in adoration; this was one of Ruskin's favourite Tintoretto's. 212, Paul Veronese: An allegorical representation of the Victory of Lepanto. This and 207 came from the church of St Peter Martyr at Murano. 213, The Crucifixion, by Tintoretto, is a sombre, dramatic representation of the scene envisaged in his most naturalistic manner, another of Ruskin's favourites; he believed that neither the Miracle of St Mark nor the great Crucifixion in S. Rocco cost the artist more pains than this comparatively small work. 214, Il Moro, a Veronese painter of the middle of the sixteenth century. This interesting picture was originally in the Admiralty; it is divided into two parts: (1) St Mark and three functionaries who are recruiting for the navy, the sinews of war are in the foreground;

The Accademia

(2) view of the Molo or chief quay of Venice, the Piazzetta and the Ducal Palace; gondolas and galleys are seen on the canal. 217, Tintoretto: Descent from the Cross; another fine composition, almost Spanish in its gloom. 219 and 221, an Assumption and a theatrical representation of the Virgin in the clouds with her feet upon the crescent-moon, and numerous portraits on the end walls are by the same master. 224, Portrait of Procurator Matteo Dandolo. 225, S. Giustina of Padua with portraits of the donors, three officers of the Treasury, with their secretaries. 227, The Risen Christ blessing three Procurators of the Republic. 228, Portrait of a man unknown. 230, Portrait of Marco Grimani. 233, Portrait of Doge Alvise Mocenigo. 234, Portrait of Andrea Cappello. 236, Portrait of Antonio Cappello. 237, Portrait of Battista Morosini. 239, Virgin and Child and three magistrates. 240, Portraits of two Senators. 241, Portrait of a Senator. 244, Portraits of two Senators. (229, Portrait of Doge Marc' Antonio Memmo, and 251, Portrait of the Patriarch Giovanni Tiepolo are by Leandro Bassano, as is also 252, Resurrection of Lazarus.) L. of door, 232, The Woman taken in Adultery. R. of door, 243, Virgin and Child and four magistrates of the Salt Office in adoration; it was the custom of the chief civil servants of the Republic to leave as a souvenir of their term of office a picture of their patron saint with their escutcheon and initials painted on it. Most of the Bonifazios in Room X. are such and came from various public offices: Tintoretto, in this picture, was the first to represent actual portraits. 255 is a Crucifixion by Veronese, painted in the frankly naturalistic style of the later school of Venice. 260, an Annunciation, is in the master's most spacious and stately manner. 264, The Coronation of the Virgin. 265, The Assumption, and 661, a ceiling panel, St Nicholas of Myra, are also by Veronese.

Venice and its Story

ROOM X

is largely held by the creations of Bonifazio and his pupils. 269, the Virgin and Child with the Baptist, SS. Jerome, Joseph, Catherine and Barbara; 280, SS. Bernard and Sebastian; and 278, The Woman taken in Adultery, are characteristic Bonifazios. 281, The Adoration of the Magi, is a beautiful work, painted with great care by the master for the Ten: the companion picture, 319, The Slaughter of the Innocents, hangs on the opposite wall. Bonifazio's receipt, dated 1545, for ten ducats on account of these two pictures still exists among the archives of the Ten. They were hung in the Financial Secretary's office in the Palazzo dei Camerlenghi. 291, The Rich Man's Feast. For depth of feeling, sumptuous colour, variety and strength of characterisation, one of the most noteworthy creations of Venetian art. Dives¹ is seated in a Venetian country-house at table between two courtesans, one of whom he clasps by the hand. She,¹ with a far-away look, turns aside, listening to a woman playing on the lute, accompanied by a man with the bass viol. All the accessories of a rich man's establishment are present. Hawks are being trained, horses exercised. To the R. Lazarus is seen, a dog licking his sores, and in the foreground lurid flames forebode impending doom. 287, Adoration of the Magi, has suffered much from restoration. 284, Christ enthroned. R., SS. Mark and Dominic;

¹ Said in the official catalogue to represent Henry VIII. and Anne Boleyn respectively.

The Accademia

L., SS. Giustina, Louis of Toulouse and Vittore. Christ holds in His right hand a book, on which is written, Non fac quod iniquum est nec iniuste indicabis (Thou shalt not work iniquity, nor judge unrighteously). This richly coloured picture was formerly placed in the chief office of the Customs. 277, 276, 279, 289, 282, 283,¹ 285, 286, 288, 290, 293, 294 are groups of saints, painted in the Bonifazio atelier, and formerly assigned to Bonifazio III. 318, St Mark, skied among them, is a finer work, probably by the master's hand. 295 (on the screen), The Judgment of Solomon, is another masterly composition, painted in 1533 for the Salt Office, in the Palazzo dei Camerlenghi. 308, on end wall, is an Adoration of the Magi. 309, Christ and Philip, is by some authorities assigned to Palma Vecchio, by others to Lotto: the official catalogue divides the responsibility impartially between Palma and Bonifazio. We may now return to 328, SS. Anthony and Paul the Hermit, and 339, a portrait by Savoldo, a Brescian, who was working at Venice in the first half of the sixteenth century. 317 and 307 (the latter on the screen) are by Rocco Marconi. 298 and 305 (on the screen) are portraits by Pordenone. The former is, however, a doubtful attribution. The official catalogue suggests Giorgione! 302, St Peter Enthroned. R., SS. Paul, Augustine and Giustina; L., SS. Mark, Augusta and the Baptist. This much repainted work has been attributed to Cima and to Pordenone. There is little doubt that it is a genuine Palma Vecchio, as is also 310, The Canaanitish Woman, a late work left unfinished at the painter's death, and mentioned in the inventory of his property. 400, a Deposition, is Titian's last work, begun by the artist for his burial place in the Cappella del Crocifisso at the Frari. An inscription tells that what Titian left unfinished, Palma Giovane completed, and dedicated to God. The Virgin bears the dead Saviour on her knees; to the R. kneels St Joseph of Arimathea; to the L., in an attitude of poignant grief, is St Mary Magdalene. 321, Pordenone: the Virgin protecting the Carmelite Fathers; The Ottoboni, donors of the picture, kneel in the foreground. 315, The Assumption, is a youthful work by Palma Vecchio. 320, Paris Bordone: scene from the legend of St Mark and the Fisherman (p. 144). The Doge, Bartolomeo Gradenigo, is represented enthroned in the midst of the Council, bending forward to receive the ring. 322 is a poor work, Paradise, attributed to the same artist. 316 is Pordenone's masterpiece. The patriarch, St Lorenzo Giustiniani, with Dantesque features, stands under a Renaissance chapel. Before him kneels St Francis, behind whom is St Augustine and an acolyte. R., St John the Baptist, with the muscular development of an athlete, behind whom is St Bernardine of Siena and a kneeling monk. 311, formerly assigned to the same artist, is now attributed to Paris Bordone.

¹ 283, SS. Mark and Vincent, is interesting from the fact that the latter saint was originally the beardless St Lawrence, who was painted over by Tintoretto to represent a full bearded magistrate, and became St Vincent. The original painting was by Michele Parrhasio, a wealthy dilettante working in Bonifazio's atelier, who used to treat his critics to sweets and wine.

Venice and its Story

THE LOGGIA PALLADIANA

is hung with late Dutch and Flemish paintings, copies and school pictures of minor interest. 343, The Brazen Serpent, is a good decorative painting by Tiepolo.

The Accademia

ROOM XI

is given to some characteristic landscapes, scenes of peasant life and portraits by the Bassani. 390, by Leandro, was once attributed to Moroni.

ROOMS XII AND XIII

display work by artists of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, including some interesting genre pictures by Pietro Longhi.

ROOM XIV

contains some Tiepolos, among them a fine ceiling painting, No. 462, the Invention of the Cross, three portraits by Alessandro Longhi, son of Pietro, three small Guardis, 704, 705, 706, two Canalettos, 463 and 494, and some works of minor interest. We turn L. into the Loggia Palladiana, then R. into Corridor I., and soon come upon the much debated, No. 516 The Tempest calmed by S.S. Mark, George and Nicholas, illustrating the story of the Fisherman and St Mark.

ROOM XV

Here are exhibited the paintings illustrating the miracles of the Holy Cross which Gentile Bellini and his pupils were commissioned to execute for the decoration of the Hall of the Guild of S. Giovanni Evangelista about 1490. The room is specially constructed to display these important pictures to the best advantage. 561 by Lazzaro Sebastiani. A crusader, Filippo de' Massari, on his return from Jerusalem offers a fragment of the Holy Cross to the brethren of the Guild. The portico of the old church of S. Giovanni is reproduced. 562 by Mansueti. The daughter of one Benvenuto da S. Polo is healed on touching three candles sanctified by contact with the relic. The scene is the interior of an old Venetian palace with costumes of the period. 563 by Gentile Bellini. Pietro de' Ludovici, sick of a fever is healed by means of a candle as in the former miracle. We are here in the chapel of the guild with the brethren in their black and crimson robes in the foreground. 564 by Mansueti. The relic is brought over the wooden bridge opposite St Lio to accompany the remains of a brother who during his life had scoffed at its power. The procession which is to accompany the body to its last resting-place is thrown into confusion by the Cross containing the relic refusing to advance into the church where the body lies. The scene is most animated. Spectators look from the windows, from the housetops and from the streets: the gondola of the period is represented. The artist himself stands at the foot of the bridge to the left, holding a paper inscribed with his name, Giovanni Mansueti the Venetian, disciple of Giov. Bellini. 565 is attributed to Benedetto Diana. The painting is said to portray the healing by the relic of a child fallen from the top of the stairs. Neither the quality of the work nor the subject seems convincing. The woman seems rather to have slipped on the pavement with her child. If genuine it can be no more than a fragment of a larger composition referred to by the older writers as containing elaborate architectural details and groups of people similar to the other paintings of this series. 566 by Carpaccio. Casting out of a devil by the Patriarch Francesco Querini. The Grand Canal is crowded with gondolas. The old wooden Rialto drawbridge with its bascules and levers spans the canal. Above, L., the patriarch is seen in a loggia of his palace at S. Silvestro casting forth the evil spirit by holding out the relic; a most interesting presentation of old Venetian architecture. Two youths in the foreground, with their backs to the spectator, one of whom has a mermaid embroidered on his hood, are in Calza costume. 567 by Gentile Bellini. Procession in the Piazza. A merchant of Brescia whose son lay dying made a vow to the relic as the procession passed and the youth was saved. Hanging on the baldachino are the scutcheons of the guilds of Venice. Near the shrine is the kneeling merchant. In the ducal procession to the R. the Doge is seen under the State umbrella with the Procurators of St Mark's, chamberlains, senators and trumpeters. This is one of the most precious pictorial documents for the aspect of the Piazza in 1496. The thirteenth-century mosaics of St Mark's are in their place; the Procuratie Vecchie are there but no Clock Tower; houses abut on the Campanile. The Porta della Carta and the façade of St Mark's are richly gilded. The Piazza is paved with brick. The artist in a Latin inscription testifies that he was kindled by love of the Cross to paint the picture. According to Vasari, Gentile surpassed himself in the next painting (568), which firmly established his reputation. During a procession to the church of St Lorenzo the reliquary falls from a bridge¹ into the canal. Several persons plunge in to save it. To none but the warder of the guild, Andrea Vendramin, was it vouchsafed to recover the shrine. A vivid representation of a piece of old Venice. At the head of the Venetian ladies, kneeling to the L., is Caterina Cornaro, Queen of Cyprus, wearing her crown. This picture, too, the artist writes, was painted in pious affection for the Holy Cross. 570, a faded work by the same artist, St Lorenzo Giustiniani, with two kneeling canons and angels bearing his crook and mitre. Signed and dated 1465.

Venice and its Story

The Accademia

¹ Vasari says the Ponte della Paglia, but it seems to us to occupy the position of the present Ponte di Canonica. The windows of the E. façade of the Ducal Palace are on the L.

Venice and its Story

In the apse are two important works painted by Mansueti for the Guild of St Mark. 569, St Mark heals the cobbler Anianus, wounded by his awl, a favourite legend; and 571, St Mark preaching at Alexandria. We cross Room XV., and opposite the apse is the entrance to which contains Carpaccio's St Ursula series, painted 1490-95, for the Guild of St Ursula. The legend, familiar to those who have studied the paintings of Carpaccio's contemporary, Memling, on the shrine of St Ursula at Bruges, may be briefly summarised. Maurus, the Christian king of Brittany, had a daughter named Ursula (Little Bear), because she came into the world wrapt in a hairy mantle. The pagan king of England, Agrippinus, hearing of her wisdom, virtue and beauty, sent ambassadors to ask the maiden's hand for his son Conon; whereupon King Maurus, knowing his daughter's vow of perpetual chastity and yet fearing to anger a powerful neighbour by refusal, was in great distress. Just before dawn¹ of the next day, while Ursula lay in her chamber, the angel of the Lord appeared to her in a dream and bade her go to her father, and wisdom would be given her to counsel him aright. When day was fully come she went to his room and enumerated to the anxious king the conditions on which the suit would be accepted: For companions she required ten virgins of noblest blood, each with one thousand virgin attendants, herself another thousand virgins; they must be allowed to make a pilgrimage to Rome; the prince and his court to be baptised.

ROOM XVI

¹ Quando del ver si sogna (when dreams are true).—INFERNO, xxvi. 7.

The Accademia

The envoys returned to England bearing such reports of the princess's beauty that Conon was fired with the desire to marry her, and the conditions were granted. Ursula and her maidens, Conon and his suite, set sail in eleven ships for Rome, where the Pope and his clergy came forth to bless them. When they had performed their vows the pilgrims returned accompanied by the Pope and reached Cologne, then besieged by the Huns, who straightway massacred the pilgrims, the Pope and his clergy—all except Ursula, whose beauty destined her for the bride of the king of the Huns. But she, defying his power, aroused his fury; he ordered her to be put to death.

572. In the centre the ambassadors arrive before King Maurus to ask his daughter's hand for Prince Conon. In a later scene to the R. the perplexed king is seated listening to the three conditions on which Ursula is prepared to accept the prince. In the background is an excellent representation of a Venetian galley. 573. King Maurus dismisses the ambassadors with his answer to their suit. 574. Agrippinus, the English king, seated under a portico, receives the ambassadors on their return. The suitor, Prince Conon, richly attired, is hurrying in the foreground of the picture, to know the result. 575. Two scenes divided by the flagstaff. L., Prince Conon takes leave of his father. R., he arrives in Brittany and is welcomed by Ursula. Farther to R., he kneels before Ursula who is taking leave of her parents. In the background they embark in a small boat to join the ship for Rome: the two cities are represented bearing traces in the architecture of Carpaccio's travels in the East. Ships, galleys and costumes are of great interest. 576 was the altar-piece of the oratory of the guild. Apotheosis of the saint surrounded by her kneeling fellow-martyrs. 577. The arrival at Rome. In the background is the castle of St Angelo ; L., the long procession of the 11,000 virgins ; R., bishops and cardinals issue from the portal of the castle ; in the centre Ursula and Conon kneel before Pope Ciriacus to receive his blessing. 578, St Ursula's dream. This probably should follow 572, or perhaps begin the series. In the story its place would be between the two scenes in 572. No consistent plan of the whole series seems to have been drawn up by the artist. Nos. 575 and 578 are dated 1495 ; 576, 1491 ; 579, 1490 ; 580, 1493. Ursula is sleeping in her chamber when an angel, bearing in his right hand a palm branch, the sign of martyrdom, appears to her in a vision. The early light of dawn streams through the open door. On the tassel of her pillow is inscribed Infantia. Every detail in this virgin sanctuary—the little crown at the foot of the bed ; the clogs placed side by side ; the tidy over her head ; the shrine and receptacle for holy water against the wall—betokens maidenly care and piety. This, the most popular of the series, has suffered much from the unhappy eighteenth century restorer who has proudly added his own name and the date of his profanation. 579. The arrival at Cologne on the return journey. The first galley bearing the saint, the Pope and his clergy has cast anchor : others follow with outspread sails. In the R. foreground is the king of the Huns with his staff, one of whom holds a plan of operations. On the battlements are the defenders of the city. One of the Huns is shooting with his cross-bow at a falcon on the branch of a tree. Storm clouds are gathering in the sky. 580. The martyrdom and burial of the saint. Two scenes divided by a flagstaff bearing the escutcheons of the donors, Nicolò Loredano and his wife. L., the massacre of the virgins and the clergy : the Pope falls pierced by arrow and sword. In the centre the king of the Huns on horseback orders a soldier to kill Ursula, but his heart has failed him and he sheathes his sword. Another, richly attired, aims an arrow at the kneeling saint's breast. Conon kneels in prayer awaiting his fate. R., the burial of the saint, who is carried on a bier by four bishops. Sunlight falls on the passing body. The charm of these pictures is perennial. Zanetti¹ used to conceal himself in the hall where they were placed to watch the effect they produced on the ordinary spectator. We cross a vestibule and enter chiefly hung with pictures by the Vivarini and Cima. 658 by the latter is a recently acquired Virgin and Child between SS. Dionysus and Victor; in the lunette, Christ between SS. Peter and Paul. 618 and 619, The Baptist and St Matthew, and 593, St Clare, are fine examples of Alvise Vivarini's work; the last is one of his greatest achievements, a living portrait, full of character. 628, Virgin and Child, is by Cosimo Tura, a Ferrarese painter (1430-96). 588, Mantegna's St George and the Dragon, is a precious possession, one of the great Paduan master's most careful works, painted about 1460. 581 is an un-restored altar-piece by Bartolomeo Vivarini and his pupils. 615 is another altar-piece by Bartolomeo, The Virgin and Child enthroned between The Baptist, SS. Andrew, Dominic, and Peter; dated 1464. 607 is another fine Alvise, The Virgin and Child enthroned; in the foreground, R., are SS. Francis and Bernardine, behind whom is St Joachim; L., are SS. Louis of Toulouse and Anthony of Padua, behind whom is St Anna. 707 is an early Catena recently acquired, The Virgin and Child with the Baptist and St Jerome. 47, St Jerome and Donor, by Piero della Francesca,

Venice and its Story

The Accademia

ROOM XVII

¹ The eminent critic and scholar, 1706-1778.

Venice and its Story

is a characteristic work by one of the greatest of the early Umbrian masters. 584 and 585, SS. Mary Magdalen and Barbara, are late works (1490) by Bartolomeo Vivarini. 606, 608, together form an Annunciation which has been attributed to Alvise; it is obviously by a later artist; the official catalogue assigns it to Bernardo Parentino, an Istrian painter, who came under Paduan influence in early life, and died 1531. 589, Christ bound to the Columns, and 590, The Virgin in Meditation, have been ascribed to Antonello da Messina, but their genuineness is doubtful; Mr Berenson admits the former in his index to the works of the Venetian painters; the official catalogue attributes it to Pietro da Messina, and 590 to an unknown copyist working from an original now at Munich. 107, St Jerome; 108, The Dead Christ between Two Angels; and 68, SS. James and Anthony the Hermit, are by Basaiti; 72 and 73, SS. Augustine and Jerome, are two panels by Catena. We now come to one of the most delightful and graceful compositions in this room, 600, a Marriage of St Catherine, by the Lombard master Boccaccino; before the Virgin and Child kneel St Peter and the Baptist; to the L. St Catherine holds forth her hand to receive the ring; to the R. stands the beautiful figure of St Rose; to the R. of the charming landscape background are portrayed the Wise Men and the Flight into Egypt. Then follow some more Cimabue: 611, SS. Thomas and Magnus, patron-saints of builders, was painted for the Masons' Guild in 1504. 623, St Christopher, was part of a larger composition, painted for the Merchants' Guild. 592, Tobias and the Angel with SS. James and Nicholas, has suffered from its transference from the original panel to canvas. 603, The Virgin and Child between the Baptist and St

The Accademia

Paul. 604, the last of the master's work in this room, is an early painting of much beauty: The Deposition, with the Marys and Nicodemus. At the further end is the entrance to

ROOM XVIII

in which are collected the Bellinis formerly hung in XVII. This little treasury contains, 582, a unique example of Jacopo's work, The Virgin and Child. 583 is a Madonna by Giovanni; and 591 is an immature work by the master; neither of these is included in Mr Berenson's index of the works of Venetian painters. 594 is an average conventional Virgin and Child. 596, Giovanni's famous Virgin of the Trees, has recently been peeled and some strata of repainting removed; it is dated 1487, but this date has been questioned by Morelli and other critics who believe it to be a maturer work painted about 1504. 610, The Virgin and Child between SS. George and Paul, is another popular work by the master; both are admirable for warmth of colour and dignity and beauty of form. 612, a Virgin and Child, is an early work. 613, The Virgin and Child between SS. Catherine and Mary Magdalen, is one of the most characteristic of Giovanni's productions; less virile perhaps than 610, but rich and warm in colour and gentle in feeling. We now turn to 595, a remarkable series of panels painted for a cassone or wedding chest. Pending the promised interpretation by Dr Ludwig, the Œdipus who has so successfully solved the riddle of the Bellini allegory in the Uffizzi at Florence,¹ the following ¹ Jahrbuch, 1903. Dr Ludwig informs me (Jan. 1905), that the article is now in the Press, and will appear in the publications of the German Institute for Art History at Florence in April. As these lines are passing through the press, news comes that the eminent critic has passed away.

Venice and its Story

suggestions by Ruskin will help the visitor :—1, Fortitude quitting the effeminate Bacchus ; 2, Domestic Love. The world in Venus' hand becoming the colour of heaven ; 3, Fortune as opportunity distinguished from the greater and sacred fortune appointed by Heaven ; 4, Truth ; 5, Lust. This last is not convincing. It seems rather slander or vice.

ROOM XIX

contains a small collection of Muranese and Paduan school paintings, and others of no great importance. We return to the vestibule and descend to originally the guest-chamber of the guild. The carved and gilded ceiling, representing Christ in the act of blessing, and the four Evangelists, each in his study, is one of the most beautiful schemes of decoration in Venice. It was here that Titian, between 1534 and 1538, painted the Presentation, now restored to its original place. The high-priest stands before the temple at the top of a grand staircase to receive the little maid who seems somewhat too conscious of her pretty blue frock. A group of richly attired Venetian ladies and gentlemen look on. At the foot of the stairway sits an old, coarse-featured peasant woman with a basket of eggs ; the mountains of Cadore are in the background. Ruskin, with characteristic waywardness, has designated this admirable and harmonious composition as the most stupid and uninteresting work ever painted by the artist. 625, Giovanni d'Alemano and Antonio da Murano's Virgin and Child enthroned, and four Latin fathers of the Church, was also executed for the very wall space it now covers. It is obviously much repainted. On a screen is 245, a portrait of Jacopo Soranzo by Titian. Above, on a swing panel, is 316, St John the Baptist, painted when the master had passed his eightieth year.

ROOM XX

GRAND CANAL, WITH THE RIVA DEL CARBON AND RIALTO BRIDGE

SECTION V

The Grand Canal and S. Giorgio Maggiore

SECOND only in architectural interest to St Mark's and the Ducal Palace are the patrician mansions that line the chief artery of Venice, known to Venetians as the Canalazzo. No more luxurious artistic feast can be enjoyed in Europe than to leisurely examine from a gondola the architectural details of the Grande Rue that so excited the admiration of Philippe de Comines. We embark at the Molo and begin on the L. side opposite the Piazzetta. The DOGANA (Custom House) is a late seventeenth-century structure, low in elevation, in order not to obstruct the view of Longhena's SALUTE. This church stands on the most magnificent site in Venice and, despite the baseness of many of its details and the inferiority of its material, is, when regarded in the mass, an impressive edifice and one of the most striking architectural features of the city. The noble flight of steps and the symmetry of the domes are most effective and pleasing. The anniversary of its consecration in 1687 is still a great popular festival, and yearly on November 21st a bridge of boats is thrown across the canal to facilitate the foot traffic. On the further side of the rio della Salute is seen the apse of the fine Gothic abbey church of S. GREGORIO, now secularised. We may disembark at the square portal, with a relief of St Gregory over the lintel, which opens on the Grand

The Grand Canal

Canal just beyond the rio. It gives access to one of the most picturesque spots in Venice—the fourteenth-century cloister of the monastery. We continue our voyage and, passing the rio S. Gregorio, note the PALAZZO¹ DARIO (fifteenth century), in the style of the Lombardi, beautifully decorated with discs of porphyry and serpentine; obtained by slicing ancient columns across. This fine mansion has altered little since the time of De Comines. The huge ground-floor beyond is the unfinished PAL. VENIER, begun in the eighteenth century. Farther on is the PALAZZO DA MULA, a fine Gothic building of the early fifteenth century, adjacent to which is the PAL. BARBARIGO, with its brazen mosaics, now the property of the Venezia-Murano Glass Co. We pass on, and next to a garden note the fine early renaissance PAL. MANZONI (1465) by Tullio Lombardi, somewhat later in style than the Pal. Dario. Passing the old church of the Carità, now the Istituto delle Belle Arti, the Accademia and a few houses, we reach the two PALAZZI CONTARINI DEGLI SCRIGNI (Contarini of the Coffers), the first by Scamozzi (1609), the second fifteenth-century Gothic. The Contarini were a wealthy family pre-eminent in the nobility of their ancestry, and owned many palaces in Venice. The last of the race died in 1902 in lodgings. They had given eight Doges and forty-four Procurators to the Republic. Beyond the rio S. Trovaso is the fifteenth-century Gothic PAL. DURAZZO or dell' Ambasciatore, once the German Embassy. The two statues on the façade are probably by one of the Lombardi. We pass the rio Malpaga and the rio S. Barnaba and reach the imposing PALAZZO REZZONICO, where Robert Browning died. It was built about 1680 by Longhena; the upper ¹ We retain the modern appellation. The old Venetians were content with Ca' (Casa) House.

Venice and its Story

storey is, however, a later addition by Massari (1740). We soon come to a magnificent group of three Gothic palaces in the style of the Ducal Palace and attributed to the Buoni. They once belonged to the powerful Giustiniani family, but the last (now the School of Commerce) was bought and enlarged by Francesco Foscari in 1437 and still bears his name. The iron lamp at the corner is modern. Facing us at the corner of the rio Foscari is the PAL. BALBI by Aless. Vittoria (1582). It is now Guggenheim's shop. We pass on to the rio S. Tomà, at whose farther corner is the PAL. PERSICO (formerly a Giustiniani) in the style of the Lombardi. A few houses beyond is the Gothic PAL. TIEPOLO: next but one stands the PAL. PISANI, fifteenth-century Gothic. At the farther corner of the rio S. Polo is the PAL. CAPPELLO-LAYARD with a most valuable collection of paintings (admission by personal introduction only), which includes Gentile Bellini's famous portrait of Sultan Mahomet II. and an interesting Adoration of the Magi by the same artist; Giovanni is represented by a Madonna, probably a school painting; and Carpaccio by a charming little picture, the Departure of St Ursula. Bissolo's Virgin and Saints is an excellent example of his art. Alvise Vivarini, a portrait, has been attributed to Antonello. The later Venetians are represented by two studies, one for the Rich Man's Feast in the Accademia by Bonifazio; an early Sebastiano del Piombo, a Pietà, which by cleaning disclosed Sebastiano's signature under a forged signature of Cima; portraits by Moroni (Giov. Batt.) and further important works by Venetian and other Italian painters. Adjacent is the PAL. GRIMANI of the Lombardi period. Two houses farther on stands the Gothic PAL. BERNADO, now belonging to Salviati. On either side of the next traghetto (della Madonetta) are two smaller twelfth-century palazzi, with beautiful Byzantine details, the PAL. DONÀ and the PAL. SAIBANTE. Next to a garden is the sixteenth-century Renaissance PAL. PAPADOPOLI (formerly Tiepolo), surmounted by two obelisks. At the farther corner of the rio stands the PAL. BUSINELLI with some interesting Byzantine windows. Next but one is the PAL MENGALDO, referred to in the "Stones of Venice" as the "terraced house." It has a beautiful Byzantine portal, and arches of the same style are visible in the older part of the building. Just beyond the S. Silvestro Pier is the site of the old palace of the Patriarchs of Grado and Venice. Little of interest meets us until we reach the PONTE DI RIALTO, which replaced a wooden drawbridge similar to that represented in Gentile Bellini's picture. It was built (1588-92) by Antonio da Ponte from a design by Boldù. Many famous Renaissance architects had at various periods offered designs, among others Michael Angelo, who, when living on the Giudecca, was invited by Doge Gritti to submit a drawing, but this "most rich and rare invention" met the fate of the rest—it was set aside as too costly. An Annunciation is sculptured on the hither side of the bridge: Gabriel and the Virgin on the spandrils; the dove on the keystone.

The Grand Canal

By the farther side stands the PAL. DEI CAMERLENGHI, or the offices of the three Lords of the Treasury (1525-28), by Guglielmo Bergamasco, formerly adorned with pictures by Bonifazio. We pass the Fabbriche Vecchie, once the Public Offices, the Fabbriche Nuove (the latter by Sansovino, but rebuilt in 1860 for the Law Courts), and the vegetable and fish-markets. Behind the latter, the last house before reaching the Ponte Pescaria, stood the old PAL. QUERINI, known as the Stallone, with the two large Gothic portals of the old shambles (p. 132). It became the poultry-market after the fall of the Republic. A new fish-market is, however, projected, and the old palace will probably be incorporated in the new building, and its façade restored to its original form. A few houses farther on is the Gothic PAL. MOROSINI; yet farther the lofty PAL. CORNER DELLA REGINA (now the municipal pawn-office). It was erected in 1724 by Rossi, the architect of S. Eustacchio, on the site of a palace occupied by the Queen of Cyprus. The huge assertive PAL. PESARO by Longhena, 1679, now comes into view. It is highly praised by Fergusson. The church of S. EUSTACCHIO (S. Stae), 1709, with its baroque façade will be easily recognised. The bust of the ill-fated Antonio Foscarini stands in the third chapel L. of entrance, the higher of the two busts to the R. of the chapel. (The church is rarely open and will be more conveniently visited in connection with S. M., Mater Domini, whose sacristan has the key.) At the farther corner of the campo is the PAL. PRIULI, with an early transitional Gothic arcade. The next building stands on the site of the mansion given by the Signory to Carmagnola. At the near corner of the rio Tron, is the PAL. TRON, sixteenth-century Renaissance; at the farther corner, the PAL. BATTAGLIA, surmounted by two obelisks, is by Longhena. The building adjacent is one of the old granaries of the Republic, with the outline of the Lion of St Mark still visible on the façade. Interest ends at the restored FONDACO DE' TURCHI (Mart of the Turks), now the Museo Civico (p. 408). Scarce a vestige remains of the old building, magnificent in its decay, which aroused Ruskin's enthusiasm.

We cross to the church of S. MARCUOLA (SS. Ermagora and Fortunato), which contains a doubtful Titian (the infant Christ on a pedestal between SS. Catherine and Andrew), thought, however, by Morelli and Dr Gronau to be a genuine youthful work of the master. Some distance farther on is the PAL. VENDORAMIN CALERGI by Pietro Lombardi (1481), one of the finest palaces on the canal. The garden wing is by Scamozzi. Next but one is the PAL. ERIZZO, fifteenth-century Gothic. The PAL. GRIMANI DELLA VIDA, this side the rio della Maddelena, is attributed to Sanmichele. We pass beyond the rio S. Felice to the CA' D' ORO, the most exquisite little mansion in Venice. It was built (1424-30) for the Contarini, and being richly gilded, was known as the Ca' d' Oro (the Golden House). The derivation from a supposed Doro family is untenable. The contracts with the Buoni and many another famous tajapiera (stone-carver), and a contract with Mastro Zuan di Franza, Pintor, for the gilding and the painting of the façade with vermilion and ultramarine, still exist. The building was profaned by some ill-designed structural alterations and the beautiful well-head, by Bartolomeo Buono, was sold to a dealer, when the fabric fell into the hands of the ballet-dancer, Taglioni, in 1847. Recently Baron Franchetti has restored it to somewhat of its original form, and the well-head has been recovered.¹ The chapel contains the S. Sebastian by Mantegna, which was found in the master's atelier after his death, and which was seen by the Anonimo in the house of Messer Pietro Bembo at Padua. This pathetic canvas was painted when the aged artist's life was setting in sadness and gloom, in poverty, sickness, and the impiety of a rebellious son. On the picture is the inscription: Nil nisi divinum stabile est, cetera fumus. Naught but God endures: all else is smoke. Beyond the Ca' d' Oro Pier is the earlier and simpler Gothic PAL. SANGREDO, now the Ravà College. The small PAL. FOSCARI beyond the Campo

CA' D'ORO.

¹ See Venezia: Nuovi Studi, etc., p. 37, by P. Molmenti.

The Grand Canal

S. Sofia has interesting Gothic details. The larger PAL. MICHIELI DELLE COLONNE, was rebuilt in the seventeenth century. Passing the rio SS. Apostoli we reach the interesting CA' DA MOSTO, twelfth-century Byzantine, but hinting at the coming Gothic. Some fine decorative reliefs are imbedded in the façade. An inscription tells that here was born Alvise da Ca' Mosto, discoverer of the Cape Verde Islands. Set back in a small court (Corte Remera) is a thirteenth-century house with an external stairway and a fine Byzantine portal. It shows admirably the pointed arch asserting itself in a Byzantine building, and will repay a halt for closer examination. Hard by the Rialto bridge is the Fondaco dei Tedeschi (Mart of the Germans), designed in 1505 by Girolamo Tedesco and completed by Scarpagnino. It is now the Central Post Office. The solitary figure that remains of Giorgione's frescoes will be seen high up between two of the top-floor windows. The sculptures on this side the Rialto bridge represent SS. Theodore and Mark.

Beyond the bridge the PAL. MANIN by Sansovino, now Banca d' Italia, was the dwelling-place of the last of the Doges. The PAL BEMBO at the farther corner of the rio is early fifteenth century Gothic. A small palace farther on, the ground floor of which is used as the Café agli Omnibus, is usually pointed out as the house of Doge Enrico Dandolo. The present Gothic building, however, with its cusped arches is obviously two centuries later in style, though the Byzantine medallions incorporated in the façade may have belonged to the original structure. A Latin inscription on the adjacent house prays the wayfarer to bestow a thought on the great Doge Dandolo, and another inscription in the Pal. Farsetti (see below) states that that palace was built for Enrico Dandolo

Venice and its Story

(volle eretto Enrico Dandolo) in 1203. All that may be said with certainty is that somewhere on the Riva del Carbon stood the Ca' Dandolo. A few houses farther on is the PAL. LOREDAN with its deep stilted arches, esteemed by Ruskin the most beautiful palace on the Grand Canal. It is twelfth-century Byzantine, restored once in Gothic, again in Renaissance times. It bears on the façade the scutcheon of Peter Lusignan,

PALAZZO VENDRAMIN

The Grand Canal

King of Cyprus, who lodged there in 1363-66. The next edifice is the PAL. FARSETTI, in the same style but simpler. It has a fine staircase with carvings by Canova. These two buildings are used as the Municipal Offices. At the near corner of the rio S. Luca is Sanmichele's stately Renaissance PAL. GRIMANI, rescued by the Austrian Government from the house-breaker's hands, and used as the Post Office. It is now the Court of Appeal. Ruskin considered this to be the principal type at Venice and the best in Europe of the central style of the Renaissance schools. We may disembark and ascend the noble staircase (the Renaissance masters excelled in the construction of stairways) to the spacious landing and halls on the first floor. At the farther corner of the rio is the PAL. CAVALLINI, so named from the horses' heads on the scutcheons. We pass on to the PAL. CORNER SPINELLI at the farther corner of the rio dell' Albero, another of the works of the Lombardi. Beyond the traghetto S. Angelo we reach the three PALAZZI MOCENIGO, sixteenth-century architecture. The ducal cap and shield still figure on the posts, for the Mocenighi gave seven Doges to the Republic. Byron lodged in the middle of the three palaces and another famous heretic, Giordano Bruno, that Ishmaelite of philosophy, was run to earth by the Inquisition in the farther one and taken to Rome to perish at the stake in 1600.¹ The early Renaissance palazzo farther on, with shields and torches carved on the façade, was another of the CONTARINI mansions, subsequently inhabited by the Countess Guiccioli. We pass two small Gothic palaces and the ample PAL. MORO-LIN, ¹ Grave reasons for doubting whether Bruno suffered death by order of the Inquisition have, however, been adduced by Théophile Desdouts, who believes the whole story to be a fabrication. See La Légende tragique de Jordano Bruno, 1885.

Venice and its Story

sixteenth-century, by Seb. Mazzoni, a Florentine painter and architect, and reach round the bend the PAL. GRASSI (1785), by Massari. At the farther corner of the Campo S. Samuele is the PAL. MALIPIERO, seventeenth-century. At the near corner of the rio del Duca is the CA' DEL DUCA (di Milano), begun for the Cornari but exchanged with Francesco Sforza for the house given him in the Campo S. Polo by the Signory. The construction was vetoed by the Signory at a point easily discernible, and the property was confiscated when Sforza, owing to political transmutations, was drawn into a hostile combination. It was given to Titian when he was preparing his decorations for the Ducal Palace as an atelier, but the rain came in, and the artist was put to much expense to make it of any service. The late Gothic PAL. CAVALLI beyond the iron bridge has been wholly restored by Baron Franchetti. At the farther corner of the rio dell' Orso is the fourteenth-century Gothic PAL. BARBARO debased by additions. Beyond the traghetto S. Stefano and a garden is the PAL. CORNER DELLA CA' GRANDE now the Prefecture, a stately Renaissance edifice by Sansovino (1532). Past the traghetto S. M. del Giglio are three palaces all more or less restored which form the Grand Hotel. The first, PAL. GRITTI, is fourteenth-century Gothic; the second, PAL. FINI, is by Tremignano (1688); the third, PAL. FERRO, fifteenth-century Gothic. The small PAL. CONTARINI-FASAN is the so-called Desdemona House. The balcony with its rich tracery is unique in Venice. Some distance farther on is the PAL. TIEPOLO, now the Hotel Britannia. The Hotel d' Italia is a new building. The fifteenth-century PAL. GIUSTINIANI is now the Hotel de l' Europe. The next house but one is the old RIODOTTO, the famous Assembly Rooms and Gambling Saloon of the later Republic, in its day the Monte Carlo of Europe. It has now been acquired by the Società Albergatore, and will probably become a dépendance of one of the hotels. We pass the gardens of the Royal Palace; the Zecca (mint), and the S. end of the Libreria Vecchia, both by Sansovino, and reach the Piazzetta, whence we started. Fortunate are they who have the opportunity of seeing the Grand Canal at the time of a royal visit, or other great occasion when steamer traffic being stopped, the waters regain the placidity we see in old engravings, and the lines of palaces hung with tapestry are mirrored in the sea. The grand bisnone (festal gondolas) are brought forth, decked with brilliant colours, some of them manned by a score of gondoliers in gorgeous old Venetian costume, and we then catch a glimpse of what Venice was in her splendour.

TRAGHETTO AND CAMPO S. SAMUELE

The traveller will probably choose an afternoon for his survey of the Grand Canal, and no better rounding-off of the day may be imagined than to ferry across from the Molo to the island of S. Giorgio Maggiore, the ancient Isle of the Cypresses and, after visiting the church, to ascend the campanile and enjoy the beautiful view from the summit. Northwards is the line of the mainland, fringed with trees and dotted with villages; in the foreground the broad curve of the city of a hundred isles; around, as the eye sweeps the horizon, are the lagoons, studded with islands, and marked by the bold strokes of the lidi; farther to the S. is the open Adriatic. As the sun sinks to its setting the vast expanse will glow in a symphony of ravishing colour.

Palladio's beautiful and impressive interior (p. 234) has been little disturbed. Among other works of pictorial interest are the two Tintoretto's in the choir (R., the Last Supper; L., the Fall of Manna), and

Atinari, Florence

S. GEORGIO MAGGIORE—ST GEORGE AND THE DRAGON
BY CARFACCIO

St Zulian

five other paintings by the same master, all described at length by Ruskin in the Venetian Index. Noteworthy are the beautiful choir stalls by Albert of Brussels, some of the finest examples of Flemish wood-carving in Italy. Longhena's modern monument and the old Latin epitaph to puissant Doge Domenico Michieli will be found in a passage behind the choir to the R. In the Sala del Conclave, where the Sacred College met in 1800 and elected Pius VII., is a fine Carpaccio, St George and the Dragon, with four episodes in the life of the saint on the predella. The campanile is a late erection (1774) on the model of the old tower of St Mark. The former campanile collapsed in February 1773, doing much damage to the conventual buildings and killing one of the monks. All that remains of the rich and vast Benedictine monastery, one of the four most opulent in Italy, is now a barrack, and of the 150 brothers it once housed, some half-dozen are permitted to linger amid the secularised surroundings and tend the sanctuary.

SECTION VI

S. Zulian—S. Maria Formosa—S. Zanipolo (SS. Giovanni e Paolo)—The Colleoni Statue—The Scuola di S. Marco—S. Maria dei Miracoli

FRESH from memories evoked by the princely mansions of the ruling families of the Republic, we may now fitly turn to the more important of the two great churches of the mendicant Friars which together form the Walhalla of Venice. We enter the Merceria from the Piazza, noting the site of the Casa del Morter (p. 132). A few hundred yards down the busy street the ramo S. Zulian on the right leads to the church of that name, which contains two unimportant Veroneses; an interesting Boccaccino, Virgin and Child, SS. Peter, Michael, and the two Johns, first altar L. of entrance; and one of Campagna's best works, a group in high relief of the dying Christ, L. of the altar.

Venice and its Story

From the Campo della Guerra at the back of the church we proceed E., cross the Ponte della Guerra, and continue along the calle until we reach, L., the Salizzata S. Lio. The second calle, to the R., along the salizzata is the picturesque Calle del Paradiso, which leads to the Ponte Paradiso. As we near the bridge we note a beautiful Gothic gable bearing the arms of the Foscari and the Mocenighi, and a fine fourteenth-century relief of the Virgin and Child and a donor. We cross the iron bridge which has replaced the fine old Ponte Paradiso, turn R., over the Ponte dei Preti, and emerge on a spacious Campo. S. Maria Formosa, one of the earliest of Venetian churches (p. 30), was entirely restored after the earthquake of 1689. Palma Vecchio's grandiose St Barbara, for which his daughter Violante is said to have stood as model, stands over the first altar on the R. It is one of the most insistent of Venetian paintings. The composition is in six compartments. R. and L. are SS. Anthony and Sebastian; above is the Virgin of Mercy between the Baptist and St Dominic. The church has also an early work by Bartolomeo Vivarini, a Pietà by Palma. Giovane, and a Last Supper by Leandro Bassano.¹

¹ An interesting gallery of pictures may be visited on Sunday mornings in the Libreria Querini-Stampalia at the back of this church, across the Campiello Querini-Stampalia and the Rio S. M. Formosa. The collection fills some score of rooms, and amid much indifferent work we note a remarkable portrait attributed to Giorgione, but more probably by Palma Vecchio, who at his death had portraits and other work in

S. Zanipolo

We traverse the campo in a N.E. direction to the calle Lunga, which we follow to the end. Here we turn L. along the Fondamenta Tetta, cross the bridge and enter the calle of the same name which leads to the Ponte and Calle Ospedaletto; the end of this calle debouches on the Salizzada SS. Giovanni e Paolo. We turn L. to the campo of the same name, noting to the R. as we pass the towering brick apse of the huge church of the Preaching Friars, due to the piety of Doge Giacomo Tiepolo (p. 93). The monastery was begun in 1236, the church twelve years later. The conventual buildings (now part of the civic hospital) were finished in 1293, and the church was not ready for consecration until 1430, when it was dedicated to the martyred Roman soldiers SS. John and Paul, and became popularly known as S. Zanipolo. To the L. before we enter are the tombs of Doge Giacomo Tiepolo (1249)¹ and Doge Lorenzo Tiepolo his brother (1275).

The interior is imposing by reason of its vast size and simple plan; though the dome, the Renaissance monuments and rococo details disturb the symmetry. The Mendicant Orders, possessing the right to bury hand for Messer Francesco Querini. A Judith also attributed in the catalogue to Giorgione is ascribed by Mr Berenson to Catena, by other critics to Palma. The Virgin and Child and saints assigned to Pordenone is believed by Dr Ludwig to be the Quaro de Madonna e do sante e S. Francesco e S. Piero specified in the Palma inventory, and the Holy Family catalogued to Bonifazio to be the Quaro de Madonna e putin e san Zuan Battista e santa Caterina e san Nicolo, also specified in the inventory. Both pictures were finished by Bonifazio. Noteworthy too are a doubtful Giov. Bellini, Virgin and Child; Bissolo, Adoration of the Magi; Mantegna, Presentation; and portraits by Tiepolo and Longhi. Two rooms are filled with scenes of Venetian life under the later Republic, painted by Gabriele Bello.

¹ Date of death.

the dead within the precincts of their buildings, were able to grant permission to wealthy and influential families, their supporters, to erect family chapels and sepulchral monuments in their churches. In this Dominican temple lie buried in monumental pomp Doges and statesmen, great captains and admirals, side by side with famous painters (the two Bellini and Palma Giovane rest here): the development of the sepulchral monument from the simple sarcophagus of the early Doges, as in the Tiepolo tombs on the west front, to its culmination in the fourteenth and fifteenth century monuments; its subsequent decline and then its utter degradation in the eighteenth century Bertucci mausoleum, may be clearly traced in this church. The traveller who remembers his Ruskin will doubtless turn first to the two monuments typical of noble and debased sculpture which are contrasted with such vehement rhetoric in the opening chapter of the "Stones of Venice." He will find the "faithful tender portrait" of Doge Tomaso Mocenigo (1423) in the L. aisle beyond the second altar, recumbent on a beautiful transitional tomb wrought by two Florentine sculptors, Piero di Nicolo and Giovanni di Martino (p. 316). It is the last of the Gothic tombs in Venice and marks the advancing Renaissance. In the choir, L. of the high altar, stands the monument, "perfect in workmanship but devoid of thought," of Doge Andrea Vendramin (1478), executed by Alessandro Leopardi and one of the Lombardi. To this "culminating point of the Renaissance," Ruskin attained "by the ministry of such ancient ladders as he found in the sacristan's keeping," and discerned that the figure of the old Doge had but one hand, and that the "wretched effigy was a mere block on the inner side, . . . the artist staying his hand as he reached the bend of the grey forehead." The sculptor of "this lying monument to a dishonoured Doge," adds the passionate critic, "was banished from Venice for forgery in 1478." The tomb is, however, a fine example of early Renaissance work, in Burckhardt's opinion "the most beautiful of all the tombs of the Doges." Two inferior figures of St Catherine and the Virgin at the base are not by Leopardi; they were substituted for the admirable statues of Adam and Eve by Leopardi's colleague, which were transferred to the Pal. Vendramin. To the L. of the choir is the early Gothic tomb of Doge Marco Corner (1368), a beautiful and simple monument, probably by the Massegne. Opposite is the "richest monument of the Gothic period in Venice," the tomb of Michele Morosini (1382). The strongly marked features of the dead Doge, "resolute, thoughtful, serene and full of beauty" are wrought in masterly style. These are the tombs referred to by Ruskin: the former as noble Gothic; the latter as furnishing the exactly intermediate condition in style between the pure Gothic and its final Renaissance corruption. L. of this is the monument to Doge Leonardo Loredan (1521) with allegorical figures, late Renaissance, executed in 1572. The statue of the Doge is an early work by Campagna. In the four choir chapels are: the first on the R. (L. of chapel), a simple tomb with the recumbent knightly figure of Paolo Loredan (1365). 2nd chapel, the Tomb of the Ambassador Marco Guistiniani (1374). 3rd chapel, passing the choir and to the R. of the chapel, the Tomb of Procurator Pietro Corner, fourteenth century; L., Tomb of Andrea Morosini (1347), a famous commander. 4th, to the R. of chapel, Tomb of Jacopo Cavalli (1394), with a noble recumbent figure in full armour. An inscription in Venetian testifies that it is the work of a native artist named Paul, son of Jacomel [delle Massegne] the stone-cutter. Cavalli was a famous condottiero employed in the Chioggian war. L., Tomb of Doge Giov. Delfin (1361), decorated with quaint and interesting reliefs.

S. Zanipolo

Venice and its Story

The monument to Vittore Cappello formerly in the L. transept is now over the main portal of St Apollinare. Over the entrance to the burnt Chapel of the Rosary is the monument of Doge Antonio Venier (1400) in the Massegne style. L. of the door the monument of the Doge's wife and daughter, with reliefs.

Beyond the sacristy door is the fine Renaissance monument of Doge Pasquale Malipiero (1462) by a Florentine of the fifteenth century. In the arcade under the next monument (in the N. aisle) is the recumbent figure of Doge Michel Steno (pp. 148, 166) (1414). The inscription tells that he was a lover of righteousness, peace and plenty. In the same arcade to the L. is the Renaissance tomb of Alvisè Trevisan an only son (1528), with a touching inscription. Beneath the next monument is a simple stone with the epitaph of Doge Giovanni Dandolo (1289). Passing the tomb of Tomaso Mocenigo already seen, we note the monument of Doge Nicolo Marcello (1474) by Aless. Leopardi, an admirable example of this artist's work. At the end of the aisle against the entrance wall is the monument of Doge Giovanni Mocenigo (1485), a typical and early Renaissance work by Tullio and Antonio Lombardo. Over the main portal are the huge monuments of Doge Alvisè Mocenigo (1577), his wife Loredana Marcella, and Doge Giovanni Bembo (1618). Against the entrance wall south aisle is another imposing monument by the Lombardi to Doge Pietro Mocenigo (1476). The growing pride of dominion is clearly seen in these sumptuous mausoleums. Pietro's tomb wrought from the spoils of his enemies, as the inscription tells, is adorned with two reliefs boasting of his exploits in war. "The Vendramin Statue," says Ruskin, "is the last which shows the recumbent figure laid in death. A few years later the idea became disagreeable to polite minds, the figures raised themselves on their elbows and began to look about them.¹ . . . But the statue soon rose up and presented itself as an actor on the stage in the front of his tomb, surrounded by every circumstance of pomp and symbol of adulation that flattery could suggest or insolence claim." In the S. aisle a stone with reliefs of Christ between two angels recalls the memory of Doge Renier Zen (1268). Between the first and second altars is the monument to Marc' Antonio Brigadin, hero of the defence of Famagosta. Beyond the side chapel is the colossal monument, 60 feet in length, of Doges Bertuccio (1658) and Silvestro Valier (1700), and the latter's wife Elisabetta, executed by Baratta and other followers of Bernini. This elaborate specimen of rococo art is denounced by Ruskin as exhibiting every condition of false taste and feeble conception.

S. Zanipolo

We may now turn to the paintings. On the R. wall of the R. transept is the St Augustine² (in oil) by Bartolomeo Vivarini, one of the master's greatest works. The Coronation³ of the Virgin beyond is a doubtful Cima. The altar-piece of the chapel of St Anthony is Lotto's⁴ The Apotheosis of S. Antonino of Florence. At the next altar is one of Rocco Marconi's best works,⁵ Christ with SS. Andrew and Peter. On the pillars right and left of the choir are SS. Dominic and Lawrence by Bartolomeo Vivarini. Alvisi's Christ⁶ bearing the Cross, in the Sacristy, is highly praised by Mr Berenson. The first altar-piece

¹ As in Jacopo Pesaro's tomb in the Frari.

², ³, ⁴, ⁵, and ⁶ These are now (1905) removed to the choir and a charge of 50 c. is made as an entrance fee to the church when not open for service.

Venice and its Story

in the R. aisle is Bissolo's Madonna with SS. Francis, Bernardine, John the Baptist, Peter, Paul, Jerome, Augustine and another. The picture has been enlarged to fill the space where stood formerly Giovanni Bellini's master-piece, the Virgin and Child and five Saints, which perished, together with Titian's Peter Martyr, in the fire at the chapel of the Rosary in 1867. The altar-piece in nine panels at the next altar is a much disputed work. It is probably by more than one hand. Bartolomeo and Alvise Vivarini, Carpaccio, Giovanni Bellini, Buonsignori, Lazzaro Bastiani, have all had their champions among the critics.

STATUE OF BARTOLOMEO COLLEONI

The famous monument of Colleoni, in the Campo outside the Church is the finest equestrian statue in Europe. The great stalwart condottiero, in full armour, sits erect in his saddle, indomitable will and forceful capacity marked in every line of his stern, clean-cut features. The "vista superba, the deep-set eyes, piercing and terrible," are rendered with supreme art. The statue was designed by Da Vinci's master Verrocchio, a Florentine sculptor, who, however, died of a cold caught at the casting, and in his will prayed the Signory to allow his pupil Lorenzo di Credi to complete the horse which he had begun. Verrocchio's supplication was, however, ignored, and the Signory gave Alessandro Leopardi, who had been banished in 1487 for forgery, a safe-conduct for six months that he might return and finish the statue. The artist so delighted his masters that the safe-conduct was indefinitely prolonged and other commissions rapidly followed. If the conception and the modelling of horse and rider are due to the Florentine sculptor, the finishing of it and the design and execution of the pedestal must be credited to the Venetian. The statue was originally gilded. Colleoni left his fortune to the Republic on condition that his statue should be placed in St Mark's Square. This the laws forbade, but there being a scuola of St Mark with a spacious campo before it, the Senate decided to erect the monument there and accept the inheritance.

The Colleoni Statue

On the N. side of the campo is the Scuola di S. Marco, now the city hospital. This, in Ruskin's estimation, is one of the two most refined buildings in Venice by the Lombardi. It was designed in 1485 by Martino, the decorations are due to Pietro. The beautiful lunette over the doorway is probably by Bart. Buon; the lions and the two fine reliefs—the healing of the Cobbler Anianus and St Mark baptising a convert—are by Tullio Lombardo. The second of the buildings referred to by Ruskin, S. Maria dei Miracoli, may be easily reached by crossing the Ponte del Cavallo, following the Calle Larga Giacinta Gallina opposite the west front of S. Zanipolo, crossing two more bridges and bearing to the left. This exquisite gem of Renaissance architecture (1480-89) was designed by Pietro Lombardo. To Tullio are due the half figures of the Annunciation on the top of the choir steps, and the best of the charming arabesque decorations in the interior. The St Francis and St Clare are by Campagna. To return to the Piazza we may cross the rio dei Miracoli, take the first calle to the L. in the Campo S. Maria Nuova, turn again by the first to the R. and on the L. will be found the Salizzada S. Canciano which leads over the Ponte S. Giovanni Grisostomo to the foot of the Rialto Bridge. A steamer from the Riva del Carbon will carry us to the S. Marco or the S. Zaccaria pier.

Venice and its Story

SECTION VII

The Frari—The Scuola and Church of S. Rocco (open daily 9-3, 4, or 5 according to season, 1 franc. A bright day is essential)

IN the "Speculum Perfectionis" it is told how that St Francis on coming to Assisi to hold the Chapter of the Order found there a great edifice of stone and mortar, built by the citizens for the meeting place of the brothers, instead of the rude wattle and daub barn in which they were wont to assemble. And the saint, fearing lest the brothers might be tempted to have similar great houses erected where they sojourned, climbed to the roof with his companions, and began to strip off the tiles and cast them to the ground, being minded to destroy the building to the very foundation; nor did he desist until the soldiers forbade him, declaring it to be the property of the town. Up to Doge

The Frari

Giacomo Tiepolo's time, as we have seen, the friars minor had no monastery in Venice, but here, as elsewhere, the Franciscans were unable to resist that unquenchable impulse in devoted human souls to raise temples made with hands to the glory of God, and about 1230 or 1240 the great monastery and church of Our Glorious Lady of the Friars were begun. The church was opened for service in 1280, and rebuilt during the second half of the fourteenth century. Santa Maria Gloriosa de' Frari may be reached from the S. Tomà Pier on the Grand Canal. It is the largest church in Venice, and one of the finest Gothic churches in Italy. Vasari attributes the design to Nicolo Pisano: the campanile (1361-1396) was erected by the Massegne. From the tracery of the lower windows in the apse, Ruskin derives the tracery of the arcade in the Ducal Palace, the circle of the quatrefoil falling between the arches when it had to support the wall. Over the Porta de' Frari, leading to the left aisle, is a beautiful relief of the Virgin and two angels and kneeling donors, by the Massegne.

The nobility and simplicity of the vast interior remind us of the great friars' churches in Tuscany and Umbria. Few Doges are buried here, the monuments inside being chiefly to famous soldiers, admirals, statesmen, and artists. In the R. aisle is the Titian monument executed in 1852, and on the third altar a fine statue of St Jerome by Aless. Vittoria, said to have been modelled from the figure of Titian when he was 98 years old. On the R. wall of R. transept is the tomb of Jacopo Marcello (1484) in the style of the Lombardi. To the R. of entrance to the sacristy is the beautiful late Gothic tomb, wrought by a Florentine sculptor, of the Franciscan S. Pacifico (1437), under whom the church was completed. Over the sacristy door is the Renaissance monument of Admiral Benedetto

Venice and its Story

Pesaro (1503): to the L. of door the fine equestrian statue in wood of Paolo Savello, a Roman patrician who was killed in action (1404).

In the second chapel, R. of the choir, R. wall, is the tomb of the Florentine ambassador, Duccio degli Alberti (1336) by a Tuscan sculptor, noted by Ruskin as the first monument in Venice in which images of the Virtues appear; L. wall, the noble and simple fourteenth-century tomb of an unknown knight, "perfect Gothic form." In the choir are two important works attributed to Ant. Riccio: R. wall, the ornate monument of Doge Francesco Foscari (pp. 181, 229) (1457); L. wall, the mausoleum of Doge Nicolo Tron (1473). The transition of Gothic to Renaissance is admirably illustrated in these two monuments. Titian's Assumption stood formerly over the high altar. In the second chapel L. of the choir is tomb of Melchior Trevisan: over the altar stands the Baptist in wood carved by Donatello when he was staying in Venice towards the end of 1456. L. aisle, beyond the baptistery, is the Renaissance tomb of Jacopo Pesaro (1547). The inscription states that the buried bishop conquered the Turks in war, and was transported from a noble family among the Venetians to a nobler among the angels. The monstrous pile of masonry beyond the Titian altarpiece (p. 235), erected to Doge Giovanni Pesaro (1659) by Melchior Barthel (a German) and Longhena, qualified by Ruskin as a huge accumulation of theatrical scenery in marble, will illustrate even more clearly than the Valier tomb in S. Zanipolo the depths of bad taste to which monumental art had fallen in the seventeenth century. The Canova monument was executed by his pupils from their master's design for Titian's tomb. On the wall to the L. of main entrance is the tomb of Pietro Bernado (1538) by

The Frari

Leopardi: above to L. of first chapel L. of entrance is the simpler tomb of Senator Simon Dandolo (1360) by the Massegne.

Turning to the pictures, we note two altar-pieces¹ by Bartolomeo Vivarini, St Mark enthroned, on the R. wall of the L. transept, and a Virgin and Child with Saints on the R. wall of the R. transept. In the third chapel L. of the choir is Alvise's Apotheosis of St Ambrose finished by Basaiti. Within the sacristy is treasured Giovanni Bellini's altar-piece,² the Virgin and Child with four saints (L., St Nicholas and another; R., SS. Benedict and Bernadine), and two of the most exquisitely charming angels in Venetian art. All the master's qualities are here beheld in their highest manifestation — maternal tenderness; fervent, grave and virile piety; and the joy of childhood. The picture makes a direct appeal to our finer emotions and the traveller will prefer to remain in silent and reverent appreciation without further intrusion of guide or critic. The Titian altar-piece in the L. aisle, painted 1519-1526 for Bishop Jacopo Pesaro, affords an admirable contrast to the Bellini. Progress even in art must be paid for. Although perfect in technique, grand in composition, rich in colour, it yet lacks the atmosphere of tranquil devotion of the earlier master. The doughty bishop, who is seen kneeling to the left, had the picture painted to commemorate a small naval victory that he gained when in charge of a papal fleet over the Turks (p. 198). Above is the Virgin and Child to whom St Francis commends the kneeling Pesaro family. At the Virgin's feet sits St Peter who turns from his reading to look on the donor below. Behind the latter stands a knight in full armour holding in his right hand the papal standard crowned by a sprig of laurel, and grasping in his left hand two Turkish captives in chains. The portraits of the Pesari are in Titian's most perfect manner. This was a favourite of Sir Joshua Reynolds who describes it at length in "The Journey to Flanders and Holland." Crossing the bridge opposite the main portal and turning L. we reach the Rio Terra S. Tomà, where is the entrance to the great Monastery, now the Record Office of Venice (Archivio Centrale), containing the most famous collection of state documents in the world. The custodian will admit the traveller to the noble double cloisters. We return to the Porta dei Frari of the church and further to the W. find the Scuola and church of S. Rocco.

¹ and ² These pictures are now (1905) removed to the choir, which is fenced round and a charge of 50 c. made for admission.

Venice and its Story

Towards the end of the thirteenth century a young noble of Montpellier found himself the master of great possessions and, following the injunctions of Christ, sold all that he had and gave to the poor. He set forth as a pilgrim to Rome and on his way passed plague-stricken cities, where he devoted himself to the service of the hospitals and by his tenderness, sympathy and fervent prayers wrought many wondrous cures. At length on his return from Rome he was stricken himself at Piacenza and a horrible ulcer broke out on his thigh. Wishing to spare his fellow-sufferers the sound of his groans he dragged himself to a ruined hut in a deserted place hard by, where angels tended his sores and a dog brought him daily bread. When healed he went back to his native city but arrived so changed by suffering that he was arrested as a spy and cast into prison. One morning after he had languished there for five years the jailer on entering his dungeon saw it flooded with a bright light, the prisoner dead, and a writing which promised healing to all stricken by plague who should call on his name. In 1485

Scuola di S. Rocco

some Venetians disguised as pilgrims carried off the saint's body to Venice; the Church of S. Rocco was erected to contain it and a guild founded in his name for the tending of the sick and the burial of the dead. The church, entrusted to Bartolomeo Buon of Bergamo, was built in the fifteenth century. The Scuola was begun about the same time (1490) by the same architect, carried on by the Lombardi and Scarpagnino (1524-37) and completed about 1550. Here during eighteen years Tintoretto worked on the stupendous series of paintings which decorate the interior. They are fully described, vigorously appreciated and depreciated by Ruskin in the Venetian Index, and since the interest they possess for the English speaking traveller is so intimately associated with the name of Ruskin we have, where possible in a sentence, given the great critic's summary judgment on them and, with few exceptions, followed his interpretations. Lower hall, facing the entrance (1) The Annunciation. (2) The Adoration of the Magi. "The most finished picture in the Scuola except the Crucifixion." (3) Flight into Egypt. (4) Massacre of the Innocents. (5) The Magdalen. (6) On opposite wall, St Mary of Egypt; between the staircases, The Circumcision; between the stairs and the entrance door, Assumption of the Virgin. "Ruined by a restorer who impudently signs his name in big letters." We ascend the stairs and from the first landing will be seen to the L. a charming Annunciation by Titian, refreshing in its comparative simplicity; R. is Tintoretto's Visitation, "one of the most precious of his paintings in Venice."

Upper hall, "Painted with less care than the lower." On the extreme L. of the wall opposite the entrance: (7) The Adoration of the Shepherds. (6) Baptism. (5) Resurrection. (4) Agony in the Garden. (3)

Venice and its Story

Last Supper. "About the worst I know of Tintoret's." Altar-piece, S. Rocco in Glory. "One of the worst order of Tintoret's." (2) Miracle of the Loaves and Fishes. (1) Raising of Lazarus. (10) Ascension. (9) Pool of Bethesda. (8) Temptation. End wall, S. Rocco: S. Sebastiano. "One of the finest things in the whole room, the most majestic St Sebastian in existence." Ceiling paintings: "On these pictures the painter has concentrated the strength he had reserved for the upper room." Oblong panel in centre, Plague of Serpents. Ovals L. and R. of same, Jonah and Sacrifice of Isaac. Square next to Jonah, Moses striking the Rock. Next is an oval, Fall of Man. One large and two small ovals on the farther side from entrance: Centre, Ezekiel's Vision. R., An Angel appears to Elijah. L., Elijah at the Brook. On the corresponding opposite side near the entrance: Central oval, Jacob's Dream. R., Joshua. L., Elisha feeding the People. When Ruskin was in Venice in 1846, buckets were standing on the floor of this room to catch the rain which came through the paintings on the ceiling.

The Guest-Chamber on the same floor.—Tintoretto's masterpiece, the Crucifixion, "Beyond all analogies and above all praise." It is said that when Agostino Carracci, who was commissioned to engrave the painting, brought his plate to Tintoretto, the master, delighted with the excellency of the work, fell on the engraver's neck and kissed him. On the wall opposite the Crucifixion, Christ before Pilate; over door, Ecce Homo. These two pictures "resemble Titian more than Tintoret in style." Christ bearing His Cross; "Tintoret in undiminished strength." Central picture of the ceiling, Apotheosis of S. Rocco (p. 264). Other allegorical pictures and figures of children also decorate the roof. The choir stalls in the large hall are beautifully carved with scenes from the life of S. Rocco, by Giovanni Marchiori. In the small room to R. of entrance is an early Titian, Ecce Homo, and the death-mask of Doge Alvisè Mocenigo with the ducal cap. We leave the Scuola and enter the

Church of S. Rocco

CHURCH OF S. ROCCO.

Tintoretto has here dealt with the story of the saint in his most unequal fashion: not all his art can make the scenes of disease and death envisaged in so realistic a manner other than antipathetic. L. of entrance, Tintoretto, S. Rocco before the Pope "A delightful picture in his best manner." R., The Annunciation. "A disagreeable and dead picture with all the faults of the age and none of the painter's merits." R. side of church in the centre, Pool of Bethesda. "A noble work, but eminently disagreeable." Above, S. Rocco in the Desert. "Deserving less attention than Pordenone's St Martin¹ opposite, a noble and knightly figure on horseback; for a considerable time I was in doubt whether or not it was another Tintoret." R. wall of the choir, below, S. Rocco plague-stricken in the Hospital of Piacenza. "A very noble picture, carefully composed and highly wrought, but gives one no pleasure by reason of its subject and of its dull monotone: a brown study of diseased limbs in a close room." Above, S. Rocco healing the Sick Peasants with their Flocks. L., wall of the choir, above, S. Rocco arrested at Montpellier as a Spy. Below, an Angel appearing to the Saint in Prison. In the chapel to R. of choir is the latest of miracle-working pictures, Christ led to Execution. For the past two centuries

¹ St Christopher and St Martin

Venice and its Story

this work has been tossed by critics between Titian and Giorgione. It is doubtful if either attribution can be made absolute, for even contemporaries were sometimes unable to distinguish between Titian's early paintings and Giorgione's, and it is known that Titian completed some of the Castelfranco master's works after his death. In the vestibule of the sacristy is Pordenone's fresco, St Sebastian.

SECTION VIII

S. Zaccaria—S. Giorgio degli Schiavoni—S. Francesco della Vigna

WE pass the N. portal of St Mark's, follow the Calle di Canonica, turn R., and, first observing the beautiful façade of the Palazzo Trevisan, associated with the memory of the notorious Bianca Cappello,¹ cross the Ponte di Canonica. We continue E., cross the Ponte S. Provolo, pass under a Gothic portal with a restored relief in the lunette of the Virgin and Child, the Baptist and St Mark, and reach the Campo and church of S. Zaccaria, once the chapel of the oldest, richest and most extensive nunnery in Venice (now a barrack), and the burial-place of the early Doges. The present church dates from the second half of the fifteenth century. The visitor will infallibly first be drawn to the altar on the L. where stands Giovanni Bellini's Virgin and Child with four saints. R. of the enthroned Virgin stand SS. Lucy and Jerome: L., SS. Catherine of Alexandria and Peter. Though imperfectly preserved and ill seen its charm is indescribable. Feminine tenderness and virile strength, fervent piety and dignity, are expressed with all the lucidity and winning grace of the master. It was painted in 1505 when he was seventy-nine years of age.

¹ A rich heiress who, when fifteen years of age, eloped to Florence with a poor bookkeeper and married him. She there became the mistress, then the wife, of Francesco de' Medici, Duke of Tuscany, who was implicated in the assassination of her first husband. Notwithstanding her scandalous past and condemnation by the laws of Venice, the Signory, on her second marriage, took her under their protection for political reasons, and proclaimed her the "true and particular daughter of the Republic." She and the Grand Duke died within a day of each other in 1587, not without suspicion of poison. The Ca' Trevisan was bought by Bianca in 1577, and given to her brother, Vittore Cappello. Francesco Sansovino dedicated his Venezia Città Nobilissima to her.

S. Giorgio degli Schiavoni

The nuns' choir, entered by a door on the right, has some fine choir stalls by Marco da Vicenza, and some pictures, among them a doubtful Palma Vecchio and a badly-preserved Tintoretto, the Birth of the Baptist. The sacristan will open the chapel of S. Tarasius (p. 38) which contains three gilded, carved altar-pieces of wood with paintings by Giovanni Alemano and Antonio Vivarini. Each altar-piece is inscribed with the name of the donatrix. The expert in the iconography of the saints will find ample scope for his science in the interpretation of the various symbols. The tomb of Alessandro Vittoria is in the L. aisle.

We retrace our steps as far as the Campo S. Provolo, where we turn R., follow the Calle S. Provolo, turn again R. along the Fondamenta dell' Osmarin, cross the Ponte dell' Osmarin and the Ponte dei Greci. We continue E. along the Calle della Madonna and the Salizzata dei Greci, cross the Ponte S. Antonin, turn sharply to the L. and reach the little oratory of S. Giorgio degli Schiavoni (Dalmatians), belonging to the lay foundation (1451) of that name and built (1551) by Zuane Zon, master mason of the arsenal. The foundation is still under Austrian jurisdiction, and a rather poor endowment is helped by a yearly contribution of two lire each from some hundred brethren, the Emperor of Austria assisting by an annual subscription. Three Dalmatian priests serve the chapel. St George's Day, when high mass is sung and the upper chamber is filled by the brethren and their friends, is a great festival. During six years, 1502-8, Carpaccio was employed in decorating the hall with scenes from the lives of three great Dalmatian saints, SS. George, Tryphonius and Jerome. These charming and naïve paintings, happily still in their original setting, have been described by Ruskin in "St Mark's Rest." The relief over the door is by Pietro da Salo. Interior: L. of the entrance are two panels with scenes from the life of St George. (1) The fight with the dragon; the young princess looks on with clasped hands. The remains of the monster's victims are a somewhat gruesome detail. (2) The victor drags the slain beast, its head transfixed by a dagger, into the city. The gorgeous dresses of the pagan king, the princess and the oriental spectators, the quaint attempts at local colour and at investing the dragon with some degree of fearsomeness, make the picture one of the most attractive of the series. The story is concluded on the wall L. of the altar. (3) The saint baptises the king and his daughter, carefully holding back his cloak lest it be spoiled by the water. This composition is rich in delightfully conceived details of Eastern splendour. R. of the altar-piece (The Virgin and Child by Catena) is a scene from the life of St Tryphonius. He is portrayed as a lad subduing the basilisk which devastated Albania. On the R. wall are the Agony in the Garden and the Calling of

Francesco della Vigna

Matthew. Then follow three scenes from the life of St Jerome. (1) The terror of the monks at the sight of the lion; (2) death of the saint; (3) the saint in his study translating the Scriptures. The furniture and surroundings in this last, painted with loving care, betray the refined taste of a Venetian scholar. A shelf of books, some manuscripts, an orrery, works of art, objects of devotion, and, a homely detail—the typical Venetian pet dog. The whole scene is pervaded with an atmosphere of calm and studious retirement.

To reach the great church of S. Francesco della Vigna, whose site is associated with one of the earliest legends of St Mark (p. 21), we may, on leaving the oratory, turn L. by the Calle dei Furlani, again L. and traverse obliquely the Campo delle Gatte, turn once again L. along the Salizzada delle Gatte, yet again L. and then R. along the Salizzada di S. Francesco. The land—one of the most extensive vineyards in Venice—was bequeathed to the Franciscans in 1253 by Marco, son of Doge Pietro Ziani. The church was rebuilt (1534-62) by Sansovino, modified subsequently by Palladio, who designed the imposing façade. In a chapel to the R. in the S. transept is a Virgin and Child by Negroponte. The figures are drawn with great fulness and beauty, and, though much repainted, the picture, executed in 1450, is a remarkable example of the Paduan master's art. The church contains seven ducal monuments, among them, in the choir, the tomb of Andrea Gritti (1538); but of far greater interest are the beautiful reliefs by the Lombardi in the Giustiniani chapel, L. of the choir. Over the altar is St Jerome enthroned: L. are SS. Michael and Agnes, R. Mark and Anthony. Below are three scenes from the life of St Jerome. On the walls are the prophets and Evangelists, and eighteen scenes from New Testament history. The series begins on the R. wall over Isaiah. The church also contains two paintings by Francesco and Girolamo da Santa Croce; a Holy Family and a Resurrection by Veronese; and, in the chapel on the way to the old cloisters, a Virgin and Child with four saints and donor by Giov. Bellini (1507), debased by re-painting.

Venice and its Story

We may retrace our steps to the Ponte S. Antonin and return to the Piazza by the way we came, or, reach the Riva degli Schiavoni, by the Salizzata S. Antonin, the Campo Bandiera e Moro and the Calle del Dose.

SECTION IX

*The Riva degli Schiavoni—S. Maria della Pietà—Petrarch's House—S. Giovanni in Bragora—
S. Martino—The Arsenal (open weekdays 9-3, free)—The Public Gardens—S. Pietro in Castello*

TURNING S. from the Piazza we pass the Libreria Vecchia, designed by Sansovino to contain the books left to the Republic by Petrarch and Cardinal Bes-

Riva degli Schiavoni

VENICE FROM THE PUBLIC GARDENS

sarione and reach the two columns of grim memories, where Browning delighted to “observe

The swallows soaring their eternal curve
’Twixt Theodore and Mark.”

To the W., on the site of the present royal gardens, stood the old granaries of the Republic. We turn E., cross the Ponte della Paglia (straw) where the barges laden with straw used to unload, and reach the Riva degli Schiavoni, in olden times the most bustling quarter of Venice. Here lived the Schiavoni (Dalmatian sailors), who manned the galleons and argosies of the Republic. Here was the starting-point for the galleys bound for the Holy Land. On the site of the present prison, John the Englishman, in the fourteenth

N.E.

Venice and its Story

century, kept "The Dragon," a hostelry, with stables, much patronised by English pilgrims, for horses were then almost as common in Venice as in other mediæval towns. Several of the Doges had the finest stables in Italy, and horses and mules were largely used by the Venetians. There was no wide Riva¹ in those days, only narrow fondamenta beyond the Molo, which was then a projecting quay, the chief landing-stage of Venice. The Riva is the favourite promenade of the Venetian popolani, and affords an ever-changing scene of local colour for the stranger. We cross two bridges to S. Maria della Pietà, which contains a masterpiece (Christ in the House of the Pharisee) by Moretto, the Brescian painter (1498-1560), in the upper choir at the S. end. Just over the next bridge (del Sepolcro, so called because the pilgrims to and from the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem lodged near), is the site of the house given by the Republic to Petrarch. Here he lived with his married daughter, entertained Boccaccio, and had a disputation with a notorious atheist of Venice, whom he failed to convert, and ejected from the house.

We turn N., beyond the house, by the Calle del Dose, and reach the church of S. Giovanni in Bragora (the marshes). Here we shall find one of the finest Cimabue in Venice (The Baptism of Christ), unhappily difficult to see as a whole, owing to its position behind the high altar. It was painted in 1491. On a pillar, R. of the choir, is another work by the same master—SS. Helena and Constantine; on a pillar to the L. is Alvise Vivarini's Resurrection, painted in 1498. The Virgin and Child in the second chapel R. of the entrance is generally assigned to Alvise, though by some critics it is attributed to Giovanni Bellini. On the L. wall is a Virgin and Child with the Baptist and St Andrew by Bartolomeo Vivarini, painted in the same year. Beneath are three predelle by Cima, with scenes from the Invention of the Cross. The church contains also a doubtful Bissolo between the first and second chapels in the R. nave, and a Last Supper by Paris Bordone, utterly disfigured by restoration, in the L. nave.

¹ The widening was effected at the end of the eighteenth century.

Arsenal

On leaving, we turn again E. by the Calle Crosera and, pursuing our way by the Calle del Pestrin on the L. and over the Ponte Storta, reach the church of S. Martino, with a Bocca del Leone (p. 323) in the façade. Just beyond the church we sight the main portal of the great arsenal, once fortified with twelve watch-towers and walls two miles in extent, paced night and day by sentinels. The portal is flanked by the four Greek lions in marble brought from the Porta Leoni at Athens by Francesco Morosini, and surmounted by the Lion of St Mark and a statue of S. Giustina by Campagna, to commemorate the victory of Lepanto. The museum contains on the first floor, among other objects of interest, models of Venetian ships and galleys of all kinds, a small carved panel from an old Bucintoro, and a fragment of a mast, all that remains of the last Bucintoro which Goethe saw and described as not over-loaded with decorations, since it was all decoration. A model of this gorgeous vessel may be seen in the room. On the second floor is a collection of weapons and spoils of war. The simple, noble statue of Vittor Pisani faces us as we ascend the staircase: a striking contrast is afforded by Canova's sentimental monument to Angelo Emo. In this room are preserved the armour of Doge Sebastiano Ziani, with closed visor and bearing a crest on the cuirass, and of Sebastiano Venier, with open visor, and crest on cuirass; of Henry IV. of France, and of the condottiero Gattamalata. We may cross the iron bridge to the L. of the portal¹ of the arsenal, and return to the Piazza by the Riva, or proceed E. along the Riva past the church of S. Biagio to the Public Gardens.

SECTION X

S. Salvatore—Corte del Milione—S. Giovanni Grisostomo

WE take our way along the Merceria, past the church of S. Zulian, until we come in sight of the tall apse of S. Salvatore and enter the church from the Merceria by the door of the L. aisle. S. Salvatore is one of the most important examples of ecclesiastical Renaissance architecture in Venice. Spavento, four of the Lombardi, Sansovino, Scamozzi and Longhena all contributed at various periods to the building and decoration, not to speak of more modern restorers. Here in the R. transept is the massive memorial to unhappy Queen Catherine Cornaro by Bernardini Contino. A finer specimen of monumental art is Sansovino's tomb of Doge Francesco Venier (1556), beyond the second altar in the R. aisle. The figures of Faith and Charity, the former said to have been almost wholly carved by the master in his eightieth year, are among the greatest achievements of later Renaissance sculpture. Over the third altar is Titian's Annunciation and, at the high altar, his Transfiguration, both painted when he was approaching ninety years of age: the former ¹ A somewhat intricate and unsavoury way leads from the arsenal in an easterly direction to the Island of Castello (p. 28). The church of S. Pietro contains some unimportant monuments and paintings; the campanile, faced with stone, is unique in Venice.

S. Salvatore

by the iteration fecit, fecit, is insistently affirmed by the veteran artist to be by his very own hand; the latter is by some critics depreciated to a school painting, but is regarded by Dr Gronau as one of the most powerful productions and masterpieces of painting that Titian has bequeathed to us. In the chapel L. of choir is a most interesting Christ at Emmaus, generally attributed to Giovanni Bellini, but by Crowe and Cavalcaselle confidently assigned to Carpaccio: another critic (Molmenti) is convinced it is by no other hand than that of Benedetto Diana.

WELL-HEAD: CAMPO S. GIOVANNI GRISOSTOMO

Leaving by the main portal we find ourselves on the Campo S. Salvatore, where in olden times stood a water trough, and a fig tree to which horses were tied, after the law of 1287 forbade equestrian traffic along the Merceria. We turn R. by the new Merceria Due Aprile, pass the Goldoni statue, and cross the Ponte dell' Olio to the church of S. Giovanni Grisostomo. Before we enter, a slight deviation by the calle Ufficio

Venice and its Story

della Seta and the calle del Teatro (over a fruiterer's shop will be seen the inscription: PROVISORES SIRICI, p. 140) will bring us on the R. to the entrance to the Corte Milione by the Ticket Office of the Malibran Theatre. On the N. side of this court stood the house of the Polo family which Marco, then a lad of seventeen, left in 1271, with his uncles Nicolo and Maffeo, for the East. A quarter of a century later three travel-stained wanderers, dressed in coarse garb of Tartar cut and speaking broken Venetian with a Tartar accent, were at first refused admission by their kinsmen. The three, to warm the affection of their relatives, invited them to a sumptuous banquet, and when all were seated, entered arrayed in flowing crimson robes of satin. Having washed their hands, they retired and returned clothed in crimson damask, and ordered the first dresses to be cut up and distributed among the servants.¹ After a few dishes a similar change was made into crimson velvet and similarly disposed of. Again they changed into dresses of ordinary fashion. When the nine suits had been divided among the servants, Marco rose, went to his chamber, and appeared with the old Tartar coats, and ripping them open with a knife, showered on the table before his amazed guests a glittering and inestimable treasure of jewels and precious stones. The thirteenth century arched doorway, now the entrance to the pit ¹ Gifts of dresses were a common form of present even to most honoured guests. The wedding present to Lucrezia Borgia on behalf of the Signory of Venice consisted of two superb crimson velvet mantles worn by their ambassadors and handed to the bride after they had divested themselves in an ante-chamber. Four thousand persons crowded the Grand Council Hall to view the dresses before the ambassadors started for Ferrara after taking leave of the Senate. Dresses in those days were costly as jewels, and the greatest artists co-operated in their production.

THE RIALTO BRIDGE

Venice and its Story

(plated) of the theatre, and various fragments of sculptured stonework imbedded in the walls of the neighbouring houses almost certainly formed part of the original Polo mansion (p. 119).

We return to the church of S. Giovanni Grisostomo by Tullio or Moro Lombardo. The finely proportioned interior holds one of the most precious of Venetian paintings—the altarpiece by Giovanni Bellini, over the first chapel to the R., SS. Jerome, Christopher, and Augustine, dated 1513. It is the last of his signed works, and was painted three years before his death. At the high altar is Sebastiano del Piombo's sensuous painting of the patron saint, with the Baptist, SS. Augustine, Liberale, Catherine of Alexandria, Agnes, and the Magdalen. Over the second altar, L., is a fine relief by Tullio Lombardo. We note the fine Renaissance well-head in the Campo, and retrace our steps to the foot of the Rialto bridge and the pier on the Riva del Carbon.

SECTION XI

S. Moisè—S. Stefano—Site of the Aldine Press—Il Bovolo—S. Vitale—S. Vio—The Salute—The Seminario (open daily 9 to 11, and after noon, 50 c.)

FROM the S.W. angle of the Piazza a bustling street leads W. past S. Moisè, a late seventeenth century church by A. Tremignan, whose amazing façade was once thought beautiful. We continue along the broad Calle Ventidue Marzo, turn an angle to the L., and, crossing a bridge reach the Campo S. Maria Zobenigo. We traverse the Campo and turn R. over the Ponte della Feltrina: continuing westward we cross another bridge, and debouch on the Campo S. Maurizio, which we traverse obliquely to the N.W. corner, whence a street leads over a bridge to the spacious Campo Francesco Morosini. The great Doge's Palace stands at the S.E. angle of the Campo, and is partly occupied by the Circolo Filologico: at the N. end is the fine Gothic church of S. Stefano (1294-1320). The principal portal and the windows of the W. front are by the Massegne. The spacious interior contains several good Renaissance monuments, the best being that of Jac. Suriano, L. of entrance; Pietro Lombardo's statues of SS. Jerome and Paul stand either side of the third altar, L. aisle; those of the Baptist and St Anthony at either side of the altar in the sacristy. The last is one of the master's most perfect works in Venice. Near these statues are Bartolomeo Vivarini's SS. Nicholas and Lawrence. Morosini's tomb is on the pavement of the nave. We quit the church by the L. aisle, and enter the cloister, with some fragmentary remains of Pordenone's frescoes.

S. Stefano

Crossing the cloister we emerge, through a portal with a relief in the outer lunette of S. Augustine and kneeling brethren of the order, on the Campo S. Angelo, which we traverse and walk along the Calle della Mandola to the Campo Manin, at the farther end of which is the Cassa di Risparmio (Savings Bank), on the site of the old Aldine Press. We retrace our steps, and before leaving the campo turn L. by the Calle della Vida, again to the L., and on the R. down the Calle and Corte Contarini del Bovolo reach a beautiful early Renaissance spiral staircase and a Byzantine well-head. We return by the Campo Manin to the Campo Morosini, at the farther end of which, on the R., is the church of S. Vitale (Vidal), which has a late Carpaccio, S. Vitale on horseback, accompanied by Valeria his wife, his sons Gervasius and Protasius, and other saints.

Venice and its Story

We cross the Grand Canal by the iron bridge, leave the Accademia to the R., turn E. by the Calle Nuova S. Agnese, and, after crossing a bridge, reach the church of S. Vio, demolished in 1813, and rebuilt in 1864. A few of the fragments of Bajamonte's house were incorporated in the new building (p. 133). The church is only open once a year, S. Vio's day, but admission at other times may be obtained by applying at the stone mason's, next door. The Campo S. Vio is associated with one of the most charming legends of Venice. Here lived the blessed Contessa Tagliapietra, whose insistent devotion and frequent visits to a priest at S. Maurizio, on the opposite side of the Grand Canal, were deemed unseemly by her family. Entreaties proving vain, the ferrymen were forbidden to row her across; whereupon the Countess took a thread, laid it upon the waters, and crossed to her devotions without human aid.

We pursue our way eastward, and after some turning of corners, pass a picturesque little shrine at the end of the Calle Barbaro. Continuing E. across the Ponte S. Gregorio and the Campo of the same name, a turning L. by the Abbazia S. Gregorio will bring us to the beautiful cloister we visited from the Grand Canal (Sec. V.). Returning to the Campo S. Gregorio, the Calle dell' Abbazia opposite leads us to the Ponte della Salute and the great plague church on the Grand Canal. The interior contains over the third altar L., Titian's somewhat faded but still beautiful Descent of the Holy Ghost, which, according to Vasari, the artist repainted shortly after its delivery in 1541, owing to the bad condition in which it was suffered to fall by the neglect of the Friars of Santo Spirito in Isola. The Virgin is drawn from the same model as that of the Assumption in the Accademia. The small ceiling medallions behind the high altar, the four Evangelists and four Fathers of the Church are also by Titian; the St Matthew is the artist's own portrait. Over the altar of the sacristy is the master's St Mark enthroned, attended by SS. Sebastian, Roch, Cosimo, and Damian (p. 254), sadly spoilt by restoration. The ceiling paintings—the Death of Abel, Abraham's Sacrifice (Isaac is a lovely child), and David and Goliath are in Titian's later manner (1543). By a happy accident these three paintings which Sansovino had commissioned Vasari in 1541 to execute for the decoration of the now demolished church of the Spirito Santo were, owing to the Florentine's absence from Venice, where he had been working for the Calza, allocated to Titian. They were subsequently transferred to the Salute. These fine compositions greatly impressed the Venetians, who flocked to see them in the Friars' church. The space between the windows on the R. wall is covered by Tintoretto's Marriage at Cana. It is described at length by Ruskin in the Venetian index, and is esteemed by the great critic to be "perhaps the most perfect example which human art has produced of the utmost possible force and sharpness of shadow united with richness of local colour." In the sacristy are, among other works, a Girolamo Pennachi (da Treviso), SS. Roch, Jerome and Sebastian; a Piero Maria Pennachi, Virgin and Child; and two small oval paintings to the R. of the altar, SS. Augustine and Nicholas, usually assigned to Ant. and Bart. Vivarini, but attributed by Mr Berenson to Giambono. In the ante-sacristy is a fifteenth century pietà in relief and an early painting (1339), The Virgin and Child with the kneeling donors, Doge Francesco Dandolo, and the Dogressa-Elisabetta, with their name saints.

PALAZZO CONTARINI, WITH SPIRAL STAIRCASE AND BYZANTINE WELL-HEAD

S. MARIA DELLA SALUTE

E. of the Salute is the Seminario Patriarcale with a small collection of sculpture and pictures. On the ground floor are a monument to Sansovino from the demolished church of S. Geminiano, with a bust of the great architect by Alessandro Vittoria; a statue of Doge Agostino Barbarigo, and other works of minor interest. Ascending Longhena's noble staircase we enter the Galleria Manfredini, which contains among other works Christ appearing to the Magdalen, and Christ and the Woman of Samaria by Filippino Lippi, and Giorgione's Apollo and Daphne (p. 253), probably painted for the panel of a cassone (bridal chest). The ferry from the Salute or the Dogano point will land us near the Piazza.

SECTION XII

SS. Apostoli—Palazzo Falier—I Gesuiti—I Crociferi—S. Caterina—S. Maria dell' Orto—S. Marziale—Palazzo Giovanelli. (Admission by personal introduction or by application to the British Consul, traghetto S. Felice, Grand Canal.)

FROM the Ca' d' Oro Pier on the Grand Canal a narrow calle leads into the broad Via Vittore Emanuele, which we follow to the R. and reach the church of SS. Apostoli. Admirers of Tiepolo will find his St Lucy receiving the Sacrament before her Martyrdom, at the altar of the Cappella Corner to R. of entrance where are also two family monuments in the best style of the Lombardi school. A Veronese school painting, the Fall of Manna, is at the L. of the choir. Some remains of Marino Falier's house are incorporated in the palazzo over the Ponte SS. Apostoli opposite the church.

S. Caterina

From the Campo Dietro la Chiesa (behind the church) we turn L. by the Calle Larga Dietro la Chiesa, then R., again L., and proceed along the Rio Terra SS. Apostoli and the Salizzata del Spezier. Crossing the Ponte Sartori we reach by the Salizzata Seriman the church of the Gesuiti, built (1715) on the site of the ruined church of the Crociferi in the base style of the age. The interior, lavishly decorated with marble and inlay of verde antico, is incredibly vulgar in taste and contains, first chapel L., Titian's martyrdom of St Lawrence, painted in 1558 when the old painter was under Michael Angelo's influence. The work, which was generally esteemed one of the most rare and remarkable of his creations, is now so darkened by time as to be barely legible. The church possesses also an Assumption by Tintoretto.

Nearly opposite the Gesuiti is the oratory of the Crociferi, with Palma Giovane's, Doge Cigogna visiting the Oratory, and six other paintings in the artist's best style. The room contains also a Flagellation by Tintoretto and a ceiling painting, the Assumption, by Titian. The large monastery buildings opposite, still bearing the device of the order (three crosses), are now a barrack. We retrace our steps across the campo, and before reaching the bridge turn R. by the Fondamenta Zen. About a hundred yards along the fondamenta is the entrance to the Convitto Nazionale Marco Foscarini whose custodian will admit to the little church of S. Caterina, which contains Veronese's admirably preserved Marriage of St Catherine (p. 265). The church has works by Palma Giovane and the inevitable Tintoretto, but we have eyes alone for the St Catherine, one of the most satisfying examples of the later glories of the Venetian school.

We continue along the Fondamenta, cross the Ponte Molin, and proceed along the Calle della Racchetta, so far as the Sottoportico dei Preti on the R. This we traverse, cross the Ponte Racchetta, turn R. then L., cross the Ponte Misericordia and pass along the Fondamenta to the Calle Trevisani on the R., which leads over two bridges to the Fondamenta G. Contarini; a few hundred yards along the Fondamenta will bring us to the Church of S. Maria dell'Orto. Cima's Baptist with SS. Peter, Mark, Jerome and Paul, in a marble setting by Leopardi stands over the first altar, R. aisle. In the third chapel L., is Tintoretto's Presentation at the Temple, and in the Cappella Contarini, the same master's St Agnes. Both have been freely restored, the former, says Ruskin, "has been so daubed as to be a ghastly ruin and a disgrace to modern Venice." Alessandro Vittoria's bust of Gasparo Contarini in this chapel is a fine example of Renaissance portraiture. We turn to the choir, R. and L. of which are Tintoretto's huge canvases, the Last Judgment, and the Worship of the Golden Calf. These are very highly appreciated by Ruskin but "demand resolute study if the traveller is to derive any pleasure from them." Vasari, who saw them shortly after they were painted, was impressed by the terrible yet capricious invention displayed in the Last Judgment, but lamented the lack of care and diligence which marred what might have been a stupendous creation. Closely scrutinised, however, both seemed to him painted da burla (in jest). The first chapel L. of entrance has (R. wall) a Pietà by Lorenzo Lotto, and over the altar an early Virgin and Child by Giovanni Bellini disastrously repainted. Over the sacristy door is a miracle-working half-figure of the Virgin and Child (restored), which was discovered in a garden in 1577 and gave the present name to the church (Our Lady of the Garden). Verocchio, Leopardi and Tintoretto were buried in

PALAZZO GIOVANNELLI—GIPSY AND SOLDIER
BY GIORGIONE

Palazzo Giovanelli

the sacristy, but most of the tombs were defaced or destroyed by the Austrians, when the church was used as a military magazine in 1855.

Making our way southward we cross the Ponte dei Mori (noting Tintoretto's house to the L. before we reach the bridge), and proceed by the Calle Larga to the Fondamenta Misericordia. Turning L. we cross the Ponte S. Marziale on the R., and reach the church of S. Marziale, which contains Titian's Tobias (p. 254), and Tintoretto's last work, the Patron Saint with SS. Peter and Paul. From the Campo S. Marziale we cross the Ponte Zancani and the Ponte S. Fosca, noting the marble footmarks on the crown (p. 412), and pass the statue of Paolo Sarpi erected near the spot where the friar was stabbed. We continue our way by the church, and a short distance to the L. along the Via Vitt. Emanuele is the Palazzo Giovanelli, one of the best examples of a restored patrician mansion of the period of the Ducal Palace. The interior is sumptuously decorated, and contains the most precious Giorgione in Venice, sometimes called the Family of Giorgione, from a statement by Ridolfi that Giorgione painted himself, his mistress and child in the picture. It is catalogued by the "Anonimo" in 1552 as a small landscape representing stormy weather, and a gipsy woman with a soldier. Vasari complained that Giorgione's subjects were difficult to characterise by a phrase, but in recent times Franz Wickhoff has suggested Adrastus and Hypsipyle for title, believing the scene to be that described in the fourth book of the Thebais of Statius, when the king, in his search for water, meets Hypsipyle with her foster child Ophaltes in the wood. The reasons given, however, are not very convincing.¹

In the foreground of the picture on the L., with

¹ See: Jahrbuch, Vol. xvi., 1895.

Venice and its Story

the characteristic Giorgione pose, stands a figure in the flower of manhood holding a staff. The dress, suggesting both knight and peasant, seems to typify the defender and sustainer of maternity symbolised by the young mother sitting, to the R., on a sloping, sunlit meadow, giving suck to her babe, both modelled with perfect naturalness and beauty. Through the centre of the picture flows a mountain stream crossed by a rustic bridge. In the background of the landscape, with its graceful trees, rises the hill city of Castelfranco, Giorgione's birthplace, darkened by storm clouds rent by a flash of lightning. The sunny foreground and the louring sky seem to tell of the vicissitudes of human existence. A classic remain with two broken columns adds to the pathetic beauty of this, one of the earliest paintings in which landscape is transfused with human emotion and poetic sentiment.

Among other attractions the gallery possesses a portrait by Antonello, a Santa Conversazione by Paris Bordone, a battle scene by Tintoretto, a portrait by Titian, and a doubtful Giovanni Bellini, attributed by Mr Berenson to Catena. In the ballroom are some very fine Venetian mirrors.

To return to the Piazza we continue along the Via Vittorio Emanuele, and beyond the Campo S. Felice, find the narrow Calle on the R., which leads to the Ca' d' Oro pier.

SECTION XIII

The Rialto—S. Giacomo di Rialto—S. Giovanni Elemosinario—S. Cassiano—S. Maria Mater Domini—Museo Civico (open daily, 9-3, 1 franc; Sundays free)—S. Giacomo dall' Orio

WE proceed by the Merceria to the Rialto bridge, which we cross, and in the campo on the farther side find the little church of S. Giacomo di Rialto, according to tradition (p. 6) the oldest in Venice. This spot, Shakespeare's Rialto, was the focus of the commercial life of the old Republic. The colonnade was covered with frescoes, and possessed the famous planisphere or mappa mondo showing the routes of Venetian commerce over the world. Here the patricians were wont to meet before noon to discourse together of private and public affairs, and from the Campanile, in the Middle Ages, the curfew rang that called men from their labours and summoned them to quench all fires. The church, rebuilt and altered more than once, no longer stands on its original site. It was removed in 1322, when the Rialto was enlarged and a loggia made, that the merchants might meet under cover. The beautiful relief of the Virgin and Child over the portico is fourteenth-century work. The six columns of the nave are the sole remains of the eleventh-century church, rebuilt by Doge Domenico Selvo. On the exterior of the apse will be found the inscription whose discovery so delighted Ruskin: AROUND THIS TEMPLE LET THE MERCHANT'S LAW BE JUST, HIS WEIGHT TRUE, AND HIS COVENANTS FAITHFUL.¹

EDICT STONE, RIALTO

Venice and its Story

On the further side of the campo, opposite the W. front, is the Hunchback of the Rialto (Il Gobbo di Rialto), restored in 1892, whence in olden times the decrees of the Republic were promulgated. Beyond the market to the L. in the Ruga Vecchia S. Giovanni is the church of S. Giovanni Elemosinario, early sixteenth century, by Scarpagnino. The picturesque campanile has an interesting relief below the cella of the bells. The high altar painting, unhappily mutilated by the destruction of the upper portion, is by Titian, the Patron Saint (St John the Almsgiver). In the chapel to the R. is an altar-piece by Pordenone, SS. Sebastian, Roch and Mary Magdalen, painted in rivalry, says Vasari, of the Titian. Above on the L. wall is a quaint relief, saved from

¹ "Hoc circa templum sit jus mercatoribus aequum; pondera ne vergant nec sit conventio prava."

NERICHSEN.

BYZANTINE CROSSES : CAMPO S. MARIA MATER DOMINI

Venice and its Story

the fire which in 1513 destroyed the old eleventh-century church.

We follow the hand indicating the way to the Museo Civico, and soon reach S. Cassiano, containing three Tintoretto's. The Crucifixion, L. of the high altar, held by Ruskin to be one of the finest paintings in Europe by the master, is a most remarkable and original treatment of the subject—a great and solemn picture in excellent condition. The altar-piece is a Resurrection and the canvas to the R. a Descent into Hell. The church has also a Palma Vecchio, The Baptist and four saints, said to be the first picture painted by him in Venice, and three paintings by Leandro Bassano.

Following the indicator pointing to the Museo Civico, we reach the little church of S. Maria Mater Domini by one of the Lombardi: the façade by Sansovino. It is situated in an interesting campo, where may be seen a few early Gothic houses with some beautiful Byzantine reliefs and crosses. The church possesses, second altar to the R., Catena's S. Cristina, ever one of the most popular of Venetian paintings. The angel to the left holding the millstone is one of the most sweet and guileless of the master's creations (p. 252). In the R. transept is Tintoretto's Invention of the Cross. Opposite is a Last Supper attributed by the earlier critics to Palma Vecchio but now generally assigned to Bonifazio.

Continuing to follow the hand we at length reach the Museo Civico in the restored Fondaco de' Turchi. The original palace, the Ca' Pesaro, was built for Giac. Palmieri, a rich Guelf refugee from Pesaro, about 1230: in 1381 the Signory purchased and presented it to the Estes of Ferrara: it was restored and redecored for the reception of the Duchesse Rénée in 1534, and finally sold to Doge Antonio

Alinari, Florence

S. MARIA MATER DOMINI—S. CRISTINA
BY CATENA

Museo Civico

Priuli. From 1621 the Eastern merchants used the old palace as their depot, and it became known as the Fondaco dei Turchi. In 1830 the building was sold to Antonio Patich for a tobacco factory, and when the purchaser came to take possession the last Turkish tenant refused to leave and shot at the Austrian police sent to evict him. In 1861 it was an imposing and picturesque ruin, with a cherry tree growing and fruiting on one of the turrets. In 1869 it was wholly restored (guasto e profanato, says Boni), all the beautiful capitals and columns were recut and scraped, and subsequently anointed with oil to bring out the veining. The upper story or series of gables probably did not exist in the old building.

In the court are some fine examples of Venetian well-heads. Room I. on the second Floor contains a collection of arms and banners, some of them captured from the Turks, and fine standards of the Republic. In Room II. are:—31, A late work by Carpaccio, The Visitation; 41, Lotto, The Virgin and Child with SS. George and Jerome and kneeling donor; and a number of characteristic scenes of Venetian life by Longhi and Guardi. Rooms III., IV., V., VI. are wholly dominated by Francesco Morosini and contain spoils of war, personal relics, among which are a book of hours (concealing a pistol), a bust, a portrait, costumes, pictures of his victories, models of galleys. Room VII. has an interesting and complete set of oselle,¹ beginning (2200) from Doge ¹ It was the custom of the early Doges to make a coronation present of wild ducks to each of the nobles in Venice. Owing to the difficulty of finding sufficient game in the lagoons Doge Celsi in 1361 gave a sum of money instead. In 1521 the number of recipients had so increased that the Grand Council permitted Doge Ant. Grimani to substitute a silver medal which was called an osella, the Venetian for bird. The custom survived till the end of the Republic.

Venice and its Story

Ant. Grimani to (2716) Doge Ludovico Manin. Venetian coins, among which are cases of gold Zecchini with a unique Marin Falier, and medals of the Carraresi. Rooms VIII. and IX. display some beautiful Venetian lace and rich stuffs; costumes, fans, stilted shoes, and miniatures, a diagram showing the method of electing a Doge, and a remarkable fifteenth-century wooden staircase. Room X., besides some furniture, has, No. 14, a portrait of Goldoni by Alessandro Longhi, and some genre paintings by Pietro Longhi. Room XI. has a miscellaneous collection of reliefs from the burnt chapel of the Rosary at S. Zanipolo; bronze works and ornaments. Room XII. contains a fine collection of majolica, including seventeen pieces of Urbino ware which belonged to Isabella d' Este, decorated with classical subjects, designed, according to Morelli, by Raphael's master, Timoteo Viti, some porcelain and glass, among which (912) is a deep blue wedding goblet by the famous Berovieri of Murano. Room XIV. has a precious collection of illuminated MSS. No. 70 (fifteenth century, Leggenda dell' apparizione di S. Marco) shows the pillar near St Clement's altar from which the hand of the saint is said to have protruded. Here are also a number of Mariegole or guild statutes, one of which (9) shows the Master of the Carpet-makers submitting the statutes to Doge Foscari. A specimen of the manufacture which has been presented to the Doge according to usage is hanging on the balcony; 166 is a portrait of Paolo Sarpi and the dagger with which he was stabbed. Room XV., 43, Basaiti, Virgin and Child with donor. 35, Jac. Bellini, Crucifixion, Room XVI., 2, Alvise Vivarini, St Anthony of Padua. 5, Carpaccio,¹ Two ¹ In the sixteenth century a catalogue was published de tutte le principali e più onorate cortigiane de Venetia.

S. Giacomo dall' Orio

Courtezans with their pets : the stilted shoes then worn by ladies are seen in this picture.¹ Four early works by Giovanni Bellini, (6) a Transfiguration, (3) a Pietà with a forged signature of Dürer ; (8) a Crucifixion, and (11) Christ mourned by Three Angels. Portraits of Doge Giov. Mocenigo (16) by Gentile Bellini and (19) a Bellini school painting of Doge Franc. Foscari. In addition we may mention as worthy of note, a Portrait by Squarcione's pupil, Ansuino da Forlì ; two more or less dubious Bissolos ; a Boccaccino, Madonna and Saints ; Lorenzo Veneziano, The Saviour ; an Annunciation by Lazzaro Sebastiani ; a characteristic Pietà by Cosimo Tura and some Vivarini and other Muranese school paintings.

The curious old church of S. Giacomo dall' Orio may be reached by turning L. from the side entrance of the museum along the Salizzada del Fontego dei Turchi, again L. by the Ramo del Megio, and following the Fondamenta del Megio and the Calle Larga to the spacious Campo S. G. dall' Orio, once the favourite meeting place of the young patricians for a game of Pallone. The timber coved roof of the church dates from the fourteenth century. On the wall R. of the entrance is a fine picture (1511) SS. Sebastian, Lawrence and Roch by Giovanni Buonconsiglio, a Vicenzian painter of the early sixteenth century, sometimes known as Marescalco. In the R. aisle is a richly carved and gilded vaulted frieze beneath which is Leandro Bassano's Preaching of the Baptist, one of his most beautiful works : opposite is an Ionic column of verde antico of wonderful size and beauty, ¹ How wayward are Ruskin's judgments at times may be illustrated by this poor work on which he lavishes the most ecstatic eulogy in the "Shrine of the Slaves," p. 38, where it is referred to as the finest picture in the world, superior even to the Bellinis in the Frari and in S. Zaccaria.

Venice and its Story

one of the "jewel shafts"¹ referred to by Ruskin. In a chapel in the L. aisle is a Lorenzo Lotto, Coronation of the Virgin with SS. Andrew, James, Cosimo and Damian (1546). This picture, which, according to Mr Berenson, is an inferior replica of one in the Ancona museum (No. 37), has been much restored. The church also contains some paintings by Paolo Veronese, of which the Doctors of the Church in four medallions are worth inspection. We return to the Piazza from the Museo Civico pier.

SECTION XIV

*S. Sebastiano—S. M. del Carmine—S. Pantaleone—
The Cobblers' Guildhall—S. Polo*

WE follow the route (Section XI.) to the Campo Morosini and turn R. by the church of S. Vitale along the Campiello Loredan. After crossing two bridges and turning an angle to the L. we reach, through the Calle Malipiero, the Campo S. Samuele. The ferry across the Grand Canal will land us at the Calle del Traghetto, which we follow to the Campo S. Barnabà. Crossing the Campo obliquely, and following the Fondamenta Gherradini, we reach on the R. the Ponte dei Pigni, as its name implies, one of the bridges where the faction fights between the Castellani and Nicolotti used to take place. The former were distinguished by red, the latter by black caps and scarves. These contests were favoured by the Signory, in order, it is believed, to foster a warlike spirit among the people, and were continued until 1705, when a peculiarly bloody affray, in which stones and knives were used, led to their abolition.² If the traveller will mount to ¹ From Franc. Sansovino's description of it as being reputed a jewel rather than a stone.

² The factions were formally reconciled in 1848.

Ponte dei Pugni

the crown of the bridge he will see two footmarks in stone let into the paving on either side. Victory smiled on that faction which could thrust their adversaries beyond the line marked by the feet. The bridge then had no parapets, and in the course of the struggle many a champion fell into the canal. We resume our way along the Fondamenta as far as the Ponte delle Paziienze. A turning opposite, to the L., brings us to the Calle Lunga, which we follow to the R., over the Ponte and along the Calle Avogaria, direct to the church of S. Sebastiano. No admirer of Veronese should leave this church unvisited. Here the painter, when he came, a young man of twenty-seven, to try his fortune at Venice, received his first commission to decorate the sacristy, owing to the influence of his uncle, the prior of the monastery. Veronese has made the walls of this temple glorious with some of his greatest creations. Here he desired to be buried, and his two sons and his brother (all fellow artists) piously gave effect to his wishes: a slab of marble on the pavement, with an inscription, marks his resting-place under his bust to the R. of the organ. A year after his work on the ceiling of the sacristy (the Coronation of the Virgin and the Four Evangelists), he painted in 1556 the ceiling of the church with scenes from the Book of Esther. People crowded to see these novel and daring compositions: at one flight he rose to the highest plane of artistic excellence, to rank with the veteran Titian, and with Tintoretto in the height of his fame. In these creations the Veronese of the Ducal Palace is already revealed with his daring perspective, the grand and victorious sweep of his powerful brush, the pulsating life and movement of his figures. In the plenitude of his genius he subsequently decorated the walls of the choir with two scenes from the martyrdom of SS. Sebastiano, Marco and Marcellino (all three victims of the Diocletian persecution), and the high altar with a Virgin and Child, SS. Sebastian, Peter and Francis, John the Baptist and Elizabeth. In the composition L. of the choir, St Sebastian in armour clasping a banner is seen exhorting SS. Marco and Marcellino to be faithful unto death, while their mother at the top of the steps entreats them to recant and live: below, kneeling wives and children add their supplications. This is esteemed by some to be the masterpiece of the artist, who has painted his own portrait in the figure of St Sebastian. To the R. of the choir is the Martyrdom of St Sebastian. Veronese designed also the decorations of the organ and painted the panels, (outside) the Purification of the Virgin, (inside) the Pool of Bethesda. The church possesses three altar-pieces by the master (the first altar has a St Nicholas by Titian), and some paintings in fresco in the upper choir—two scenes from the Martyrdom of S. Sebastian, Prophets and Sybils.

We retrace our steps to the Ponte delle Paziienze, which we cross and soon reach the long basilica of S. Maria del Carmine, elaborately renovated in the seventeenth century. The church contains a somewhat faded Cima, Birth of Christ, with a characteristic landscape; an early Tintoretto, the Purification of the Virgin (according to Ruskin it is a glorious Circumcision, "I do not know," he writes, "an aged head more beautiful or picturesque than that of the high priest,"); Lorenzo Lotto's Apotheosis of St Nicholas, with the Baptist, St Lucy, and angels bearing the bishop's mitre and crook. In a landscape to R. is seen St George slaying the dragon; in the centre the Princess near a city by the sea; L. are some peasants—a noble and poetic creation, which has however been sadly maltreated by restorers. The landscape was much admired by Vasari. A fine bronze relief near

DOORWAY WITH COLOURED RELIEF OF SS. MARK AND ANIANUS; COBBLERS' GUILD HOUSE, CAMPO S. TOMÀ

the fifth altar L.—a Pietà with three kneeling donors—formerly attributed to Sansovino is now believed by Dr W. Bode to be by the hand of Lionardo da Vinci, and to have been executed by him during his employment in Verrocchio's atelier. The eminent critic (who had formerly ascribed the work to Verrocchio) was led to this conclusion by a comparison with the stucco relief, Discord, exhibited in the Victoria and Albert Museum in London, "as after the manner of Lionardo," and with another bronze relief in the University collection at Perugia, assigned to Vincenzo Dante. Dr Bode dates the Carmine relief 1474-5, on his identification of the charming little child kneeling in front of the two other donors as Guidobaldo, son of Federigo da Montefeltro.¹

We leave by the door of the L. aisle, and make our way through the long Campo S. Margherita and across the Ponte S. Margherita to the church of S. Pantaleone, which we visit for the sake of the fine altar-piece, a Coronation of the Virgin, by Giovanni Alemano and Antonio Vivarini in the chapel L. of the choir. Beneath the Virgin are angels bearing the instruments of the Passion: lower still the four Evangelists, R. of whom are SS. Ambrose and Augustine, L. SS. Jerome and Gregory; on either side are the ranks of the blessed saints with their symbols; a choir of exultant angels above. The painting betrays marked Cologne influences. What art was able to accomplish four centuries later we may see by lifting our eyes to the ceiling of the church over which expatiate Fumiani's paintings of the Martyrdom and Apotheosis of the patron-saint.

We leave the church on our left, and continuing N.E. along the Calle S. Pantaleon, debouch on the Crosera, which we follow to the R. At the end of the Crosera we turn L. then R., cross the Ponte della Frescada and follow the Calle del Campanile to the

¹ See Jahrbuch, vol. xxv., 1904.

S. M. del Carmine

Campo S. Tomà. Here we shall find the old Guild Hall of the Cobblers (Scuola dei Calerghi) with a relief by Pietro Lombardo, St Mark healing the cobbler. The quaint signs of the craft over the portal and Pietro's sculpture bear traces of the original colouring. We turn by the N. side of the church into the smaller Campo S. Tomà, which we cross obliquely, pass over the Ponte S. Tomà, follow the Calle dei Nomboli, turn L. along the Rio Terra dei Nomboli, then R. by the Calle dei Saoneri, cross the Ponte S. Polo, and on the R. pass the fourteenth-century Campanile of S. Polo, one of the finest at Venice. At the base are carved in stone two lions, one of which has a serpent coiled round its neck, the other holds a human head in its claws. They are popularly supposed to symbolise the fate that overtook Marin Faliero. We note on the L. the fine old Gothic S. portal of the church, and emerge into the broad Campo S. Polo. On the exterior of the apse of the church is an interesting relief of the Virgin with SS. Jerome and Augustine and donors. On the W. side of the Campo are two reliefs, the Baptism of Christ, and the Virgin and Child with SS. Paul and Peter, and angels swinging censers; on the L. are two houses with fine medallions and carvings over the portals.

From the S.E. angle of the Campo we follow the Calle della Madonetta, cross a bridge and the Rio Terra dei Meloni, and reach by the Calle del Perdon the Campo S. Apollinare. On the L., just before we emerge into the campo, are an inscription and a medallion of Pope Alexander III., which mark his legendary resting-place (p. 62). (Another tradition, however, indicates the portico of the old church of S. Salvatore in the Merceria as the spot where he lay.) From the campo a way leads southwards to the S. Silvestro Pier on the Grand Canal.

SECTION XV

*Giudecca—The Redentore—The Zattere—The Gesuati
—Lo Spirito Santo—S. Trovaso*

A STEAMER leaves the Riva degli Schiavoni every hour for the S. Croce Pier on the island of the Giudecca where stands Palladio's masterpiece, the plague church of the Redentore de' Cappucini. The island, formerly known as Spinalunga, was assigned (giudicata) in the ninth century as a place of banishment to certain of the nobles implicated in the murder of Doge Tradenico. Hence according to some authorities its name: by others it is believed to have been the ancient Jewry.

The fine proportion and perfect symmetry make the interior of the church of the Redentore even more impressive than that of S. Giorgio Maggiore. In the sacristy will be found three early Venetian paintings once assigned to Giovanni Bellini, now generally attributed: (1) Virgin with the sleeping Jesus attended by two Angels to Alvise Vivarini (p. 245); (2) Virgin and Child with SS. John and Catherine, and (3) Virgin and Child with SS. Jerome and Francis to Bissolo. The last is by some critics attributed to Pasqualino, a feeble imitator of Giovanni Bellini. The church also possesses two indifferent Tintoretto's and two altar-pieces by Francesco Bassano; Campagna's Crucifix and bronze statues of SS. Mark and Francis are on the high altar.

We may return by the steamer that crosses every few minutes to the fondamenta of the Zattere (rafts), so called because here the great rafts of timber from the Alps were and still are landed. Eastward on the

FISHING BOATS ON THE GIUDECCA

Venice and its Story

Zattere is S. Maria del Rosario, known as I Gesuati,¹ an eighteenth-century Dominican church with ceiling, frescoes and two altar-pieces painted by Tiepolo: farther E. is the renaissance church of Lo Spirito Santo, which contains a fine Marescalco (p. 411), Christ between SS. Erasmus and Secundus, from the monastery of St Secundus. We retrace our steps westward, noting a bocca del leone on our way, to the rio di S. Trovaso, on which is a most picturesque squero (boat builder's) purchased by the municipality of Venice to save it from destruction. We cross the Ponte S. Trovaso to the church of S. Trovaso, which contains two Tintoretto's of interest. At the high altar is his Temptation of St Anthony. "A small and very carefully finished picture, marvellously temperate and quiet in treatment," says Ruskin, who describes the painting in the Venetian Index. There is little tranquillity in the other picture, the Last Supper, in the L. transept. The whole scene is full of "bustle and tumult," and in nearly all its details the composition is coarse and irreverent. The moment chosen is when Christ has uttered the words, "One of you shall betray Me." An overturned rush-bottom chair is in the foreground; one of the Apostles is leaning down to fill his glass from a large fiasco of wine on the floor; another is in the act of lifting the lid of a soup kettle; a cat is lapping up some of the soup. The solemn scene is degraded to the level of a vulgar beanfeast. To return to the Piazza we may recross the Ponte S. Trovaso and follow the Calle Larga Nani and the Calle Larga Pisani to the Rio Terra Ant.

¹ The Gesuati were an order of mendicant friars founded by the Blessed Giovanni Colombini, a wealthy merchant of Siena, who died in 1367. Colombini was one of the great company of saints created by the example of St Francis, and called his followers the poverelli di Gesù (the poor little ones of Jesus).

Palazzo Labia

Foscarini, which leads to the Accademia Pier on the Grand Canal.

SECTION XVI

Palazzo Labia (open daily 9-5, 1 franc.)—S. Giobbe
—The Ghetto—Gli Scalzi

FROM the S. Geremia Pier on the Grand Canal we turn along the W. bank of the Cannareggio and quickly reach the Pal. Labia. A hall on the first floor is decorated by the finest of Tiepolo's compositions existing in Venice. The frescoes, which are under restoration as we write, are painted with marvellous dexterity and decorative art. The subjects of the two principal compositions are, R. of entrance, the Banquet of Antony and Cleopatra—the disgust of the turbaned figure to the right at the waste of so fine a pearl is admirably expressed. Left of entrance, the Departure of Antony. The ceiling is "cloudily enwrapped with allegorical devices." We continue along the fondamenta and at length reach the grass-grown campo, opposite the Ponte Tre Archi, on which stands the Franciscan church of S. Giobbe attributed to Pietro Lombardo. The chief pictures of interest are in the sacristy: the portrait of Doge Cristoforo Moro with a careful representation of a ducal cap is a Bellini school painting; a well-preserved Marriage of St Catherine is by Previtali in the master's most suave and gracious manner (p. 258); there is also a not very convincing tryptich by Ant. Vivarini. In the Ante-Sacristy is a much-restored Savoldo, the Birth of Christ. Moro's tomb is on the ground before the altar in the beautiful renaissance chapel erected by the Doge to his personal friend St Bernardine—a fine example of Pietro Lombardo's decorative genius and power.

Venice and its Story

The Ghetto Vecchio and the Ghetto Nuovo may be reached by crossing the Ponte Tre Archi and following the E. bank of the Cannareggio to a portico which gives access to the Jewry of Venice. The term Ghetto is said to have originated from the fact that here were located the old and new foundries for casting (gettando) the ordnance of the Republic, and that the sites of the foundries (the Ghetto Vecchio and the Ghetto Nuovo) were in 1516 assigned to the Jews for their quarter. Little that is characteristic of the old Jewry now remains. On the L. as we enter the Ghetto is an inscription declaring the "firm intention of the magistrates of the Republic to severely repress the sin of blasphemy whether committed by Jews or converted Jews. They therefore have ordered this proclamation to be carved in stone in the most frequented part of the Ghetti, and threaten with the cord, stocks, whip, galleys or prison all who are guilty of blasphemy. Their Excellencies offer to receive secret denunciations and to reward informers by a sum of a hundred ducats to be taken from the property of the offender on conviction."

We return to the fondamenta and pursue our way to the fine bridge on the R. which spans the Cannareggio and leads to the railway station. We cross the bridge and reach the church of S. Maria agli Scalzi (1648-89), designed by Longhena. The façade by Sardi was restored by the Austrians in 1853-62. The lavishly decorated interior is condemned by Ruskin as a vulgar abuse of marble in every way. The ceiling is frescoed by Tiepolo in his most admired and flamboyant style. Behind the high altar is a doubtful Giovanni Bellini. The last of the Doges, Ludovico Manin, lies in this church, which was erected, as its name implies, for Our Lady of the Shoeless Friars. We return to the Piazza from the pier close at hand.

Titian's House

SECTION XVII

Titian's House—S. Michele in Isola—Murano

FEW parts of Venice have suffered more from the disfigurement wrought by national decadence, poverty and insensibility than that now bounded by the Fondamenta nuove. In the sixteenth century this was one of the most charming quarters of the city. Here stood the smaller pleasure palaces of the patricians, with delicious gardens sloping down to the sea, whither they could retire after the business of the day to refresh themselves and entertain their friends. The gardens gave on that exquisite prospect where:—

Venice and its Story

“the hoar
And æry Alps towards the north appeared
Thro' mist an heaven-sustaining bulwark reared
Between the east and west; and half the sky
Was roofed with clouds of rich emblazonry.”

At evening over the face of the waters, fanned by the cooling breezes of the north, glided the “black Tritons” of the lagoons, graced by the wit and fashion and beauty of Venice. Salutation and repartee were winged with laughter from mouth to mouth, and stanza alternating with stanza of Tasso's noble verse answered each other in song over the rippling sea. Titian's palace,¹ where the master entertained all who were celebrated in art and literature, stood near the present Fondamenta. While the tables were being laid the guests were taken to see his great collection of pictures, then for a stroll about his beautiful gardens. The banquet was arranged with delightful art; tables were loaded with the most delicate viands—fine Ferrara finocchi preserved in vinegar, mostacciate in spices, pheasants and guinea-fowl from Padua—and the most precious wines; music of sweet voices and many instruments accompanied the feast. Pleasures and amusements followed, suited to the season and the guests, until midnight closed the revelry. Here he feasted with his gossips Sansovino and the Aretino, the latter returning the painter's hospitality by an invitation to sup with him and Angiola Zaffeta, and keep old age, the spy of death, at a respectable distance; or with the beautiful lady and divine creature, la Spadara Angela. Here also that arch braggart, Benvenuto Cellini, was hospitably received during one of his² escapades to Venice, per andare a zonzo, and given wise counsel.

¹ Now hidden by workmen's dwellings,

² Vita, Book II., lxi.-lxij.

Murano

There was no brick wall then fencing about the fair island of S. Michele with its beautiful churches, cloisters and gardens; no cloud of coal smoke fouling the atmosphere of Murano, it too adorned with palaces and lovely pleasaunces.

To reach the site of Titian's house we make our way to the station of the ferry steamer for Murano, on the Fondamenta Nuove. We turn down the Calle delle Tre Croci behind the pier, bear to the R. and cross to the Calle della Pietà, on the L. of which is the Ramo Tiziano, which leads to the Campo Tiziano, where a commemorative tablet and inscription will be found. The steamer for Murano leaves every quarter of an hour and calls at S. Michele in Isola. There is little of interest in this vast Campo Santo of Venice save Paolo Sarpi's tomb in the atrium of the church of S. Michele. A marble slab marks the spot where the great patriot lies. We visit the island and regain a steamer to Murano. How has the glory of Murano departed—Muranum delitiae et voluptas civium Venetorum! Its palaces and pleasure grounds are said by an anonymous writer of the seventeenth century¹ to be beautiful beyond description. Spacious chambers and banqueting halls were hung with tapestry wrought with scenes from the Punic wars, and furnished with the most precious and ornate productions of Venetian craftsmen. Delicious gardens were traversed by artfully designed paths and provided with arbours of interlaced foliage; fountains, fish-ponds, cool grottos adorned with coral and shells, pastures gay with the manifold colours of flowers, and trees bearing choicest fruits charmed the eye. Classic peristyles and exedra, decorated with paintings and arabesques, afforded shelter from the heat of the sun or from rain, and invited to quiet converse.

MURANO

¹ Italiae brevis aescriptio. Utrecht, 1650.

On gaining the island of Murano we follow the Fondamenta Vetrai and soon reach the church of S. Pietro Martire, which possesses Giovanni Bellini's altar-piece (1488), the Virgin and Child, to whom St Mark presents Doge Agostino Barbarigo. Notwithstanding the clumsiness of restorers this remains one of the most precious of Venetian paintings. The Assumption of the Virgin in the L. aisle has been attributed to the master, but is more probably an atelier painting in which traces of Basaiti's hand have been discerned. Worthy of note are a fine altar-piece in the R. aisle by Francesco da Simone da S. Croce. The Virgin and Child enthroned between S. Jerome and the Prophet Jeremiah; and a Boccaccino in the chapel R. of the choir, Virgin and Child enthroned between SS. George, Augustine, Ambrose and the Baptist, formerly attributed to Bartolomeo Vivarini.

We continue along the Fondamenta, cross the Ponte Vivarini and turn R. along the Fondamenta Cavour to the ancient basilica of SS. Mary and Donatus. Legend tells of the Emperor Otho I. caught in a fearful storm, and vowing, if saved, to build a church to the Virgin, who appeared to him in a vision and indicated this very triangular space, bright with a mass of red lilies, as the chosen spot. To the basilica of S. Maria here erected, Doge Domenico Michieli gave in 1125 the body of S. Donatus and the bones of the slain dragon, which are still suspended over the high altar. The story of the saint, as related by the worthy sacristan of the church with dramatic gestures, is as follows: A terrible dragon once devastated Cephalonia, devouring the inhabitants and poisoning the waters of the river up which it swam. The good bishop Donatus determined to rid the land of the monster, and, accompanied by his clergy, went towards the river to confront it. On its appearance the clergy fled, but the saint, boldly advancing alone, spat at the beast, which at once fell dead. Donatus then took a cup, and drinking of the water of the river, found it pure and sweet, called back his clergy and showed them the dead monster.

Murano

The exterior of the apse, with its masterly decoration of coloured brick and marble so lovingly described by Ruskin in the "Stones of Venice," is one of the most interesting examples of twelfth century Lombard architecture in North Italy. We enter and note the rare and precious pavement of the church which is finer even than that of St Mark's. Much of it has been broken up and reset, but enough has remained undisturbed to rejoice the eye of the traveller. The quaint designs are wrought of opus Alexandrinum, porphyry, verde antico and mosaic. A favourite subject is that of two cocks bearing between them a fox with feet bound—the triumph of watchfulness over cunning. The date, September 1, 1140, may still be read on the pavement in the middle of the nave near the main entrance. The tall, solitary figure of the Virgin in the act of blessing in the apse is a twelfth century mosaic. An example of Sebastiani's work—Virgin and Child with the Baptist, St Donatus and the donor (1484)—will be found in the L. aisle over the entrance to the baptismal chapel, which contains some interesting antiquities.

Venice and its Story

The local museum possesses a unique collection of Venetian glass of the finest period by the Berovieri family and the Dalmatian, Zorzi il Ballerin, some of the ancient luminous red glass contrasted with a modern imitation, and a Libro d'Oro with genealogies of members of this, the closest of the guilds of Venice (p. 268). Descendants of the Berovieri still work for Salviati.

SECTION XVIII

Torcello—S. Francesco del Deserto—Burano

THE poor and almost desolate island of Torcello lies N.E. of Murano and may be reached by the ordinary steamer from the Fondamenta Nuove, or by pleasure steamer from the Riva degli Schiavoni during the season, or by gondola with two rowers. If the pleasure steamer be chosen it is preferable to ferry across to Torcello on arriving at Burano, where a long stay is made in the interests of the lace factories.

The ride by gondola is a delightful experience. As we are urged along the channels by the stalwart gondoliers with rhythmic strokes, lagoons, islands and mainland villages unfold themselves to our sight. A little group of villages amid some poplars to the N.W. is all that remains of the once great and rich Roman city of Altinum. To the N.E., among the islands and groups of trees that seem to float, mysteriously poised in the soft grey vaporous atmosphere, is S. Francesco del Deserto, with its cypress groves and solitary stone pine, where St Francis bade his little sisters the birds keep silence while he prayed (p. 88).

Torcello

The tall, square campanile of Torcello has long been in view. We pass St James of the Marshes (S. Giacomo della Palude), now a powder magazine, then Burano, and at length enter a canal, pass under a decayed bridge,¹ and are landed at the edge of a sloping plot of grass, once the busy market-place of an important city. The cathedral of S. Maria, founded in the seventh century, has been twice restored or rebuilt (864 and 1008), but much of the material and probably the apse of the original basilica still survive in the actual fabric. Less than fifteen years since could be seen the old episcopal throne and semi-circular tiers of seats, erected in 864, worn by generations of Christian pastors² as they sat amid their clergy facing the people. But the seats have been rebuilt and the throne partly restored with ill-fitting slabs of cheap Carrara marble. We remember visiting the cathedral shortly after the renewal with a young Italian architect, who, to our expression of pained surprise, replied: Ma signore, era in disordine (but, sir, it was so untidy). There is no disordine now in the scraped and restored interior. Many of the original marbles, with beautiful and virile designs, however, still remain in the chancel; and in the facings of the pulpit stairs, hewn into blocks and placed in position by the old builders with small regard for continuity of design, we may perhaps gaze on the very stones brought from the mainland at the time of the great migration under Bishop Paul. The restored thirteenth-century mosaic of the Last Judgment on the W. wall, with its ingenuous realism and grim humour, is unrelated in style

¹ Painted in Walter Crane's "Bridge of Life."

² In primitive times the bishop sat in the centre of the apse facing the congregation, just as the judge had done in the law-courts, which served as models for the first Christian churches.

Venice and its Story

to anything in St Mark's, and is the analogue of many a sculptured Gothic west front in northern Europe. The mosaic in the apse, the Virgin and the Twelve Apostles, with an Annunciation on the spandrels, is Byzantine in style, and believed by Saccardo to be late seventh-century work.

We note the old stone shutters of the windows as we pass to the campanile, which lost one-third of its height by a lightning stroke in 1640. A magnificent view of the lagoons and the mainland is obtained from the summit. The remarkable little ninth-century church of S. Fosca, with its picturesque portico round the apse, is Byzantine in plan, and was modified and partly rebuilt in 1008. It was restored in 1247 and again later. The cupola was probably never finished and is replaced by a low tiled roof, but the four arches which were to carry the dome still remain. The capitals of the interior are fine examples of Byzantine Corinthian, and a rudely-carved font of alabaster is worth notice. On our way back we may touch at the little island of S. Francesco del Deserto. The friars give a gracious welcome, but true followers of the poverello that they are, will accept no gifts in return save reverence and courtesy. A little church and monastery were built around the spot where St Francis prayed, and a small brotherhood have for seven centuries kept unbroken the traditions of their gentle father. The gondoliers will not permit us to return to Venice without touching at the neighbouring island of Burano. There is nothing of interest to the visitor save the lace factories, but before leaving the populous and busy island let us remember that here was born in 1707 Maestro Baldassare Galuppi, a barber's son, known as il Buranello, who for half a century charmed the ears of Europe with his exquisite, dainty and now forgotten melodies. The immortality which his seventy-four operas, his oratorios and sonatas failed to secure, has been conferred by a few verses of an English poet.¹

S. Nicolo del Lido

SECTION XIX

S. Nicolo del Lido

FROM the Riva degli Schiavoni, and from any pier on the Grand Canal, steamers at frequent intervals will carry the traveller to the Lido di Malamocco, popularly known as the lido, one of the narrow sandbanks which, aided by the wit and industry of man, have preserved Venice from destruction by the patiently eroding, and at times, fiercely aggressive waves of the Adriatic. In earliest times it was covered with pine forest, and many an ancient Doge went hawking there. The Adriatic side, a line of bare, desolate sand dunes, visited only by a few lone fishermen when Byron used to take his daily rides on horseback to and fro between the fort and Malamocco, is now the most frequented bathing-station in North Italy. Along the shore "more barren than the billows of the ocean," Byron and Shelley rode one evening, and as the sun was sinking held that pregnant talk

"Concerning God, Freewill and Destiny," which is immortalised in Julian and Maddalo.

As the vessel steams along St Mark's Channel, will be seen on the left the once fair island of S. Elena, where the ashes of the mother of Constantine, the discoverer of the True Cross, are reputed to rest, and where many famous scions of the Giustinani and Lore-dano families lie buried. But Vulcan has now laid his sooty hand upon it and tall smoke-stacks smirch the sky. The old monastery walls with their romantic investiture of the erba della Madonna and other mural plants, the cloister with its gardens and tangle of rose-bushes, are now demolished to give place to an iron-foundry, and if the traveller seeks to visit the church, once so magnificent within that it seemed a miracle of sumptuous decoration,¹ he will be told that it is now a machine-room (magazzino da macchine). The wanderer who cares for the more silent and intimate charm of Venice will, on the arrival of the steamer at Lido, turn aside from the thronged and dusty road to the bathing pavilion, follow to the N.E. the Via S. Nicolo, and walk ² along the shore by meadows bright in spring-time with blue salvia and the star of Bethlehem to the restored eleventh-century church of S. Nicolo inside the fort. The tomb of the founder (Doge Dom. Contarini) stands over the portal, and in a small chamber in the L. transept, now used as a lumber room, a short inscription of a dozen words tells that there lie the ashes of the stout old Imperial Vicar, "Famous Taurello Salinguerra, sole i' the world,"³ who for seven months held Ferrara (p. 93) for his master, the great Frederick, against the allied forces of the Venetians and of the Lombard League. Treachery effected what force could not, the brave old soldier fell, a captive, into Venetian hands. He was generously treated while he lived and at his death given honourable burial in this church. At this island⁴

¹ A Toccato of Galuppi's — Browning.

Venice and its Story

¹ Italiae Brevis Descriptio.

² The walk may be shortened by taking the direct steamer to S. Nicolo which leaves the Riva hourly.

³ See Browning's "Sordello," passim.

⁴ The feast of the translation of the body of S. Nicolo, once so popular, is now almost forgotten. High mass is sung in the church on the festal day, May 9th, but in 1903 a pair of ancient dames and a few fisherwomen, with their children and babes, formed the whole congregation.

Chioggia

shrine, in olden times, the galleys and argosies of the Republic called to take in sweet water for the voyage and to pray for protection to the mariners' patron saint, and here stood a fair and costly lighthouse. We retrace our steps to the Jewish cemetery and turn L. down a country lane which we follow as far as the Villa la Favorita; we turn again L. and reach the shore of the open Adriatic, saturated with indescribable tones of blue, from palest turquoise to deepest ultramarine, and dotted with the rich yellow and orange sails of fishing craft.

The walk may be pursued along the grass-grown ramparts of the old Austrian fort to the left, or we may turn to the more material seductions of the Stabilimento dei Bagni to the right.

SECTION XX

Chioggia

A STILL finer view of the Lidi is obtained by a voyage to Chioggia and back on the steamers which start from the Riva some half-dozen times daily, and if the voyager happen on a sunny, vaporous day he will enjoy a feast of gorgéous colour almost cloying in its richness.

On loosing from the Riva we steam along the canal Orfano, the legendary scene of the slaughter of the Franks and pass the islands of S. Servolo (now the lunatic asylum), S. Lazzaro with the Armenian convent and printing-press, S. Spirito and Poveglia. Beyond the porto of Malamocco on the lido of Pelestrina, a few hundred yards to the south of S. Pietro in Volta, stands the little village of Porto Secco on the filled-up porto of Albiola, where the first stand was made against Pepin and

(p. 19). The beautiful lines of the Euganean hills have long been in sight, and coloured sails of the Chioggian fishing craft.
that the old Venetians were wont to distinguish of the porti by the colour of the water that through: Tre Porti on the N., which gives Torcello and Burano group of islands, being
S. Erasmo (now filled up), blue; Lido, red mocco, green; Chioggia, purple. We pass and enter the harbour. Chioggia, to the jaded seer, has the inestimable advantage of offering of interest save the descendants of a fine and race of islanders still retaining some of the characteristic traits of costume and language.
admirable view of Venice as we return in the eve gradually rising with her domes and towers from sea, is not the least delightful part of a restful charming excursion.

“ How sleeps that City now ! far, far is fled
Her tale of fights outfought and Doges dead.
The flying Fames ring round her still ; but she Dreams in her melted Pearl of sky and sea.”

L'ENVOI •

“ THE word Venetia,” says Francesco Sansovino, “ is interpreted by some to mean VENI ETIAM, which is to say, ‘ Come again and again ’ ; for how many times soever thou shalt come, new things and new beauties thou shalt see.”

CA
nuovo

APPENDIX

LIST OF DOGES

- Paolo Anafesta, A.D. 697-717.
 Marcello Tegaliano, 717-726.
 Orso Ipato, 726-737.
 Si. Mastro Miles, 737-742.
 Orso Diodato, 742-755.
 Galla Gaulo, 755-756.
 Domenico Monegaro, 756-765.
 Maurizio Galbaio, 764-787.
 Giovanni Galbaio, 787-804.
 Obelerio de' Antenori, 804-809.
 Angelo Participazio, 809-827.
 Giustiniano Participazio, 827-829.
 Giovanni Participazio I., 829-836.
 Pietro Tradenico, 836-864.
 Orso Participazio I., 864-881.
 Giovanni Participazio II., 881-887.
 Pietro Candiano I., 887-888.
 Pietro Tribuno, 888-912.
 Orso Participazio II., 912-932.
 Pietro Candiano II., 932-939.
 Pietro Participazio, 939-942.
 Pietro Candiano III., 942-959.
 Pietro Candiano IV., 959-976.
 Pietro Orseolo I., 976-977.
 Vitali Candiano, 977-978.
 Pietro Memo, 978-991.
 Pietro Orseolo II., 991-1008.
 Otho Orseolo, 1008-1025.
 Domenico Centranico, 1026-1032.
 Domenico Flabianico, 1032-1043.
 Domenico Contarini, 1043-1071.
 Domenico Selvo, 1071-1084.
 Vitale Falier, 1085-1096.
 Vitale Michieli I., 1096-1102.
 Ordelafo Falier, 1102-1117.
 Domenico Michieli, 1117-1130.
 Pietro Polani, 1130-1148.
 Domenico Morosini, 1148-1156.
 Vitale Michieli II., 1156-1172.
 Sebastiano Ziani, 1173-1178.
 Orio Malipiero, 1178-1192.
 Enrico Dandolo, 1193-1205.
 Pietro Ziani, 1205-1229.
 Giacomo Tiepolo, 1229-1249.
 Marin Morosini, 1249-1252.
 Renier Zeno, 1253-1268.
 Lorenzo Tiepolo, 1268-1275.
 Jacopo Contarini, 1275-1280.
 Giovanni Dandolo, 1280-1289.
 Pietro Gradenigo, 1289-1311.
 Giorgio Marin, 1311-1312.
 Giovanni Soranzo, 1312-1328.
 Francesco Dandolo, 1329-1339.
 Bartolomeo Gradenigo, 1339-1342.
 Andrea Dandolo, 1343-1354.
 Marin Faliero, 1354-1355.
 Giovanni Gradenigo, 1355-1356.
 Giovanni Dolfin, 1356-1361.
 Lorenzo Celsi, 1361-1365.
 Marco Cornaro, 1365-1368.
 Andrea Contarini, 1368-1382.
 Michele Morosini, 1382.
 Antonio Venier, 1382-1400.
 Michel Steno, 1400-1413.
 Tomaso Mocenigo, 1414-1423.
 Francesco Foscari, 1423-1457.
 Pasquale Malipiero, 1457-1462.
 Cristoforo Moro, 1462-1471.
 Nicolo Tron, 1471-1473.
 Nicolo Marcello, 1473-1474.
 Pietro Mocenigo, 1474-1476.
 Andrea Vendramin, 1476-1478.
 Giovanni Mocenigo, 1478-1485.
 Marco Barbarigo, 1485-1486.
 Agostino Barbarigo, 1486-1501.
 Leonardo Loredano, 1501-1521.
 Antonio Grimani, 1521-1523.
 Andrea Gritti, 1523-1539.
 Pietro Lando, 1539-1545.
 Francesco Donato, 1545-1553.
 Marc'antonio Trevisano, 1553-1554.
 Francesco Venier, 1554-1556.
 Lorenzo Priuli, 1556-1559.
 Girolamo Priuli, 1559-1567.
 Pietro Loredano, 1567-1570.
 Luigi Mocenigo, 1570-1577.
 Sebastiano Venier, 1577-1578.
 Nicolo da Ponte, 1578-1585.
 Pasquale Cicogna, 1585-1595.
 Marin Grimani, 1595-1606.
 Leonardo Donato, 1606-1612.
 Marc'antonio Memo, 1612-1615.

Appendix

- Giovanni Bembo, 1615-1618.
Nicolo Donato, 1618.
Antonio Priuli, 1618-1623.
Francesco Contarini, 1623-1624.
Giovanni Cornaro, 1624-1630.
Nicolo Contarini, 1630-1631.
Francesco Erizzo, 1631-1646.
Francesco Molini, 1646-1655.
Carlo Contarini, 1655-1656.
Francesco Cornaro, 1656.
Bertuccio Valieri, 1656-1658.
Giovanni Pesaro, 1658-1659.
Domenico Contarini, 1659-1674.
Nicolo Sagredo, 1674-1676.
Luigi Contarini, 1676-1683.
- Marc'antonio Giustiniani, 1683-1688.
Francesco Morosini, 1688-1694.
Silvestro Valier, 1694-1700.
Luigi Mocenigo, 1700-1709.
Giovanni Cornaro, 1709-1722.
Sebastiano Mocenigo, 1722-1732.
Carlo Ruzzini, 1732-1735.
Luigi Pisani, 1735-1741.
Pietro Grimani, 1741-1752.
Francesco Loredano, 1752-1762.
Marco Foscarini, 1762-1763.
Luigi Mocenigo, 1763-1779.
Paolo Renier, 1779-1789.
Ludovico Manin, 1789-1797.

GENERAL INDEX

A.

- Accademia, The, 327-352.
 Acre, siege of, 66.
 Adam and Eve, statues of, 229.
 Adriatic, Wedding of, 35-37, 62-64.
 Albiola, 19, 21, 27, 433.
 Aldine Press, site of, 395.
 Aldus, 268-270.
 Alemano, Giov., 244, 350, 383, 416.
 Alexander III., Pope, 55, 59, 60-63, 417.
 Alexius, brother of Isaac Comnenos, 75, 77.
 — son of Isaac Comnenos, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79.
 Altinum, 4, 5, 280, 428.
 Anafesto, first Doge, 10.
 — his policy and death, 12.
 Angelo, Michael, 355.
 Apollinare, S., 417.
 Apostoli, SS., 400.
 Agnadello, defeat of, 203.
 Aquileia, 3, 4.
 — Patriarchs of, 39, 56.
 Aristocracy, their growing power, 59, 88, 96.
 — their firm and wise rule, 106, 111, 114.
 Arsenal, The, 50, 389.
 Arundel, Lady, at Venice, 218.
 Attila, 4.

B.

- Baldwin, first Latin Emperor of the East, 82.
 — II., 98.
 Barattieri, Nic., raises columns in Piazzetta, 65.
 — builds first Rialto Bridge, 65.
 Barbarossa, 55, 59, 60-62, 290.
 Basaiti, Marco, 251, 331, 333, 348, 377, 410.

- Bassano, Franc., 266, 324, 418.
 — Jacopo, 320.
 — Leandro, 337, 341, 411.
 Basseggio, Pietro, 227, 314.
 Battles, bloodless, 170.
 Bajamonte, conspiracy, 130, 131.
 Bellini, Gentile, 83, 246-248, 286, 341, 342, 343, 354.
 — Giov., 248, 249, 323, 330, 339, 354, 377, 383, 386, 390, 394, 402, 411, 418, 422, 426.
 — Jacopo, 246, 349, 410.
 Bembo, Giov., 370.
 Bergamo, won by Venice, 172.
 — loss of, 203.
 Bernadine, St., 101.
 Berovieri, The, 268, 410, 428.
 Bianchini, Vicenzio, 237, 239, 240.
 Bissolo, Pier. Fr., 251, 333, 334, 354, 372, 418.
 Black Death at Venice, 145.
 Boccaccino, 348, 366, 411, 426.
Bocca del Leone, 134, 323, 389, 420.
 Boldù, 355.
 Bonifazio, 258-262, 323, 327, 338, 339, 354, 367 (note), 408.
 Bordone, Paris, 262, 340, 389, 404.
 Bovolo, il, 395.
 Breach of Promise, 87 (note).
 Bregno, Ant., 229.
 Brescia, won by Venice, 170.
 — loss of, 203.
 Brienne, John of, his bravery, 90.
 — Walter of, 71.
 Brigadin, Marc' Ant., 210, 371.
 Brittany, Anne of, 194.
Broglio, the, 9.
 Bronze Horses, the, 81, 153, 287.
 Browning, Robt., 353, 387, 431, 432.
 Bruno, Giordano, 361.
 Bucintoro, the, 37, 64.
 Bulgaria, King of, 83, 90.
 Bull Fights, in Piazza, 55.
 Buon, Bart., 325, 373.
 —, Bart. of Bergamo, 228, 379.

Buonconsigli, Giov., see Marescalco.
 Buoni, the, 228, 354, 358.
 Burano, 4, 430.
 Burne-Jones, 291 (note).
 Byron, 361.
 Byzantine artists, 226.

C.

Ca' del Duca, 362.
 Ca' d'Oro, 358.
 Ca' da Mosto, 359.
 Cabinet, the, 124.
 Canal, the Grand, 194, 352-364.
 Canal, Orfano, 433.
 Cabot, Sebastian, 209.
 Calle Paradiso, 366.
 Calendario, Filippo, 227, 314.
 Caloprinis faction, 34.
 Calza, Guild of, 165, 166, 222, 223.
 Cambrai, League of, 176.
 — Peace of, 200-205, 208.
 Campagna, Girolamo, 233, 366, 369, 418.
 Campanile, foundation of, 27, 54.
 — the old, 276.
 Canale, Martin da, his eulogy of Venice, 104.
 — description of Piazza by, 105.
 — of procession by, 108.
 Canaletto, 267, 341.
 Candiano I., Pietro, Doge, 27.
 Candiano II., Pietro, Doge, expansion of trade under, 27.
 Candiano III., Pietro, Doge, 28.
 — his rebellious son, Pietro, 31.
 Candiano IV., Pietro, Doge, 31.
 — his murder, 32.
 Candiano, Pietro, Doge, 314.
 Candiano, Vitale, Doge, 34.
 Canova, 361, 376, 389.
 Caorle, 4, 28, 112.
 — Saracens defeated at, 26.
 Cap, Ducal, evolution of, 11.
Capri, the three, their duties, 133.
 Cappello, Bianca, 382.
 Cariani, 258, 335.
 Carità, S. M. della, 327.
 Carmagnola, 167, 169, 170, 172.
 — his trial and execution, 173, 174.
 Carmine, S. M. del, 414.
 Carpaccio Vitt., 249, 250, 325, 332, 334, 342, 344-347, 354, 365, 384-385, 390, 395, 409, 410.

Carrara, Marsilio da, 142.
 Carrara, Franc., 152.
 Carraras, the, 163, 164, 174.
 Carta, Pta. della, 228, 277.
 Casa del Morter, 365.
 Cassiano, S., 408.
 Cassiodorus, letter of, 8.
 Castellani and Nicolotti, 412.
 Castello, origin of, 27.
 — S. Pietro di, 235, 390 (note).
 Catena, 251, 323, 347, 348, 367, 404, 408.
 Caterina, S., 401.
 Celsi, Lorenzo, Doge, 152.
 Centranico, Dom., Doge, 40.
 Cervantes, 211.
 Charlemagne, 13.
 Charles V., 207, 208.
 Charles VIII., 187.
 — his appearance, 194.
 — enters Italy, 195.
 — his defeat, 196.
 — his death, 196.
 Chioggia, 157, 160, 433.
 Church, the, her public spirit, 9.
 Cigogna, Pasquale, Doge, 216.
 Cima, 251, 330, 347, 348, 388, 389, 402, 414.
 Civico, Museo, 408-410.
 Cobblers' Guildhall, 417.
 Cobden Madonna, the, 111, 326.
 Colleoni, Bart., 174, 185 (note), 186.
 Colleoni, statue of, 231, 372.
 Columbus, Christopher, 187 (note), 190, 191.
 Columns, raising of in Piazzetta, 64.
 Comacchio, devastated by Venetians, 26.
 Comines, Philippe de, 192, 194, 195, 200.
 Comnenos, Isaac, 74, 75, 78.
 Commercial decline, 209.
 Condottieri, the, 163, 174.
 Conquest, cost of, 174.
 Conscription, naval, 128.
 Conspiracy, Spanish, 216.
 Constantinople, siege and capture of, 76, 77.
 — second siege and capture, 79, 80.
 — sack of, 80, 81.
 — walls of, 81.
 — loss of, 99, 100.
 Contarini, Dom., Doge, 33 (note), 41.

General Index

- Contarini, Andrea, Doge, 154.
— his courage, 159.
Contarini, Jacopo, Doge, 111.
Corfu, 76.
Corn Office, institution of, 111.
Cornaro, Caterina, 188, 189, 190.
— her tomb, 390.
— Giov., Doge, 218.
— Marco, Doge, 154, 315, 369.
Correr, Museo; see Civico, Museo.
Corte Remera, 359.
Council, Great, election of, 59.
— shutting of, 120.
— qualifications for, 120, 121.
— its increase, 122.
— its powers, 123.
— Privy, the, 123.
Councillors, Ducal, their origin, 40.
Crete, 82, 84.
— revolt at, 153.
— heroic defence of, 219.
Crichton, the Admirable, 215.
Crivelli, 334.
Crociferi, the, 401.
Crusades, the, 46, 47, 66.
— the fourth, 67.
Cusighe, Sim. da, 329.
Cypriotes, side with Venetians, 155.
Cyprus, acquisition of, 188-190.
—, loss of, 212.

D.

- Dalmatia, 35, 50, 53, 152, 165.
Dandolo, Andrea, Doge, 145, 300,
303, 307.
Dandolo, Enrico, 57, 59, 287, 307, 359.
— made Doge, 66; his bravery,
77, 83; death, 83.
— Franc., Doge, 142.
— Giov., Doge, 114, 370.
Dante describes Arsenal, 51.
— at Venice, 140.
Debt, public, 57.
Delfino, Giov., Doge, 152, 370.
Deodato, made Doge, 13.
Diana, Benedetto, 329, 333, 342,
390.
Discipline, 128.
Disraeli, his scorn of Gothic, 279.
Dogado, the, 17.
Dogana, the, 352.
Doge, the, his powers and state, 10, 11.
— election of, first, 11.

- Doges, curtailment of powers of, 40, 59.
— method of electing, 65, 106, 107.
— their added titles, 82.
Dogeship, institution of, 10; temporary abolition of, 12; changes in, 14.
Donatello, 376.
Donato, S., translation of body of,
53.
Doria, Pietro, captures Chioggia, 157.
Ducat gold, issue of, 114.
— value of, 115.
Dürer, Albert, 249.

E.

- Eastern Empire, war with, 57.
Eccelino, crusade against, 102.
— his death, 102.
Edict stone, the, 290.
Elena, S., 432.
Emo, Angelo, defeats pirates, 225.
Emperor, Greek, his territory spoiled, 52, 53.
Empire, cost of, 84.
— the Holy Roman, 55.
English, woollen goods, branded for bad quality, 127; knights, 153; mercenaries, 163.
Erasmus, 268.
Este, Beatrice d', at Venice, 192.
— Isabella d', 269.
Eustacchio, S., see Stae, S.
Evelyn, 296.
Expansion, territorial, 165, 174.

F.

- Fabbi, Calle de', 130.
Fabriano, Gentile da, 244, 332.
Faenza, Venetians at, 143.
Faliero, Marin, at Zara and Genoa, 145; elected Doge, 147;
ominous landing of, 147; signs truce with Genoese, 147; insulted by Steno, 148; conspiracy of, 149; foiled, 149, 150; trial and execution of, 150; portrait, veiled, 150; house of, 400.
Falier, Ordelafo, Doge, 48, 50,
307, 308.

Falier, Vitale, Doge, defeats Normans, 44, 292.
 — wife of, 293.
 Ferrara, trading rights won at, 48.
 siege of, 93; Venetians defeated at, 130.
 Ferries, 274.
 Fiore, Jac. del, 243, 325, 328.
 Flabianco, Dom., Doge, 40.
 Fleets, trading, and others, 125.
 — their numbers, 127.
 Florigerio, 335.
 Fondaco dei Tedeschi, 269, 359.
 Fondaco dei Turchi, 192, 356, 408.
 Forlì, Ansuino da, 411.
 Formosa, S. M., 366.
 Foscari Francesco, his forward policy, 167; intrigues for power, 168; elected Doge, 169; his sorrow and humiliation, 178-179; his burial, 181; portrait of, 181; cost of his policy, 181.
 — Jacopo, story of, 176-178.
 Foscari, Ant., 217, 218.
 Francis I., 207.
 Francis, St., 88, 374.
 Francesca, Piero della, 348.
 Francesco, S. del Deserto, 88, 428, 430.
 Francesco, S., della Vigna, 21, 231, 235.
 Franks, the, 11, 13, 14.
 Frari, S. M. dei, foundation, 94, 374-378.
 — cloisters of, 378.
 Fumiani, 416.

G.

Gaddi, Agnolo, 244.
 Galbaio, Giov., Doge, 14.
 — Maurizio, Doge, his wise rule, 13.
 — associates, his son with him, 14.
 Galley, its equipment, 128.
 Gallileo, 215.
 Gama, Vasca di, rounds the Cape, 191.
 Gardens, Public, 390.
 Garibaldi at Ducal Pal., 325.
 Genoa, origin of war with, 96.
 Genoese, attack Venetians at Constantinople, 117; defeats of, 97, 98, 102, 146; hustled out of Syria, 116; quarrel with, 116; final defeat of, 160.

Gesuati, the, church of, 420.
 Gesuiti, the, church of, 233, 401.
 Ghetto, the, 422.
 Ghisello, tempts Falier, 149.
 Giambono, Michele, 238, 244, 329, 330, 398.
 Gibbon at Venice, 279.
 Giminiano, S., 8 (note), 277.
 Giobbe, S., 421.
 Giorgio Maggiore S., 50, 234, 364.
 Giorgio Schiavoni, S., 383-385.
 Giorgione, 252-254, 359, 382, 400, 403.
 Giovanni in Bragora, S., 388.
 Giovanni Elemosinario, S., 406.
 Giovanni Grisostomo, S., 394.
 Giovanni e Paolo, SS., see Zanipolo, S.
 Giudecca, the, 418.
 Giustiniani, the, 57.
 Giustiniani, Stefano, Doge, renunciation of office by, 139.
 Gobbo, il, 406.
 Goethe, 225, 263, 316.
 Goldoni, 271.
 — statue, 139.
 Gondola, the, 274.
 Gonsalvo of Cordova, 202.
 Goths, the, 8.
 Gradenigo Bart., Doge, 144.
 Gradenigo, Pietro, Doge, 115.
 Gradenigo il Nasone, Doge, 152.
 Grado, 3, 4, 9, 18.
 — Patriarchs of, 15, 39.
 Greeks, defeat of, 90.
 Gregorio, S., 352, 396.
 Gregory XIII., 212.
 Grimani, Ant., his disgrace, 197.
 — Marino, Doge, 216.
 Gritti, Andrea, Doge, 209.
 Guardi, Franc., 267, 341, 409.
 Guariento, paints Hall of Great Council, 154; discovery of his frescoes, 154 (note).
 Guilds, trade procession of, their costumes, 108-109.
 Guiscard, Robt., defeat of, 43.
 — victory of, 44.
 Gusnasco, Lorenzo, 269.

H.

Henry III., his grand reception 223.
 — IV., at Venice, 46.
 Heraclea, 3, 4, 9, 11, 13, 17.

General Index

Honorius III., 236.
Hungarians, defeated, 27.
Hungary, King of, 50, 51.
— Louis of, wins Dalmatia, 152.

I.

Imperi, Giov., 172.
Inquisition, Holy, at Venice, 94-96.
Inquisitors of dead Doges, 89, 94.
Inquisitors, the State, 136, 137, 210.
Isidore, St., translation of body of, 53.
— festival of, 152.

J.

Jesolo, 4, 11, 13, 17.
Jerusalem, Venetians at, 52.
Julius II., 199, 202, 206.

K.

Kiev, attack on, 91.

L.

Latin Empire, its fall, 98-100.
Lauds, Ducal, 108 (note).
Laws, navigation, 89.
League, Lombard, the, 55.
Legnano, battle of, 55.
Leonardo, da Vinci, 416.
Leoni, Piazzetta dei, 289.
Leopardi, Aless., 230, 231, 303, 368, 370, 373, 377, 402.
Leopold I., 288.
Lepanto, battle of, 210-212.
Libreria Querini-Stampalia, 366 (note).
Libreria Vecchia, 232, 234, 276, 364.
Licinio, Bernadino, 258.
Lidi, the, 2.
Lido, the, 431.
— S. Nicolò di, 432.
Lippi, Filippino, 400.
Load-line, institution of, 127.
Lombardo, Ant., 230.
— Martino, 230.

Lombardo, Moro, 230.
— Pietro, 230, 318, 326, 358, 373, 374, 395, 417, 421.
— Sante, 231.
— Tullio, 231, 353, 373, 374, 394.
Lombardi, the, 230, 303, 354, 361, 370, 373, 379, 385, 390.
Lombards, the, 4, 5, 9, 11, 12, 13.
Longhena, Baldassari, 235, 352, 353, 356, 365, 376, 390, 400, 422.
Longhi, Aless., 341, 410.
— Pietro, 267, 341, 367 (note), 409, 410.
Longinus, 9.
Loredano, Leonardo, Doge, 198, 202, 209, 369.
Lotto, Lorenzo, 258, 339, 371, 409, 412, 414.
Louis XII. enters Italy, 197.
Love, Castle of, 86.
Ludwig, Dr, 256, 257, 261, 349, 367.

M.

Maffiking at Venice, 196.
Mainland aggrandisement, 129.
Malamocco, 4, 11, 13; made capital, 13; abandoned, 18; its destruction, 18 (note); engulfed, 48.
Malipiero, Pasquale, Doge, 180, 370.
Manin, Ludovico, last Doge, 221, 225, 422.
Mansueti, Giov., 250, 333, 334, 341, 342, 344.
Mantegna, 347, 358, 367 (note).
Manuel, Greek Emperor, spoils the Venetians, 56.
Marcello, Nic., 370.
Marconi, Rocco, 258, 333, 339, 371.
Marcuola, S., 356.
Marescalco, 411, 420.
Marie, the, procession of, 29-30.
Mark, St, church of, 25, 33, 33 (note), 44, 45, 50, 226, 227, 232, 233, 236, 239, 280, 282-310.
— crypts, 309.
— present state of fabric, 310-313 (note).
— at Rialto, 22.
— his body stolen, 22; and brought to Venice, 25; patron saint of Venice, 25.
— Brides of, 28.
— finding of body of, 45.
— jewels of, 98.

Mark, St. and fisherman, legend of, 144.
 — body of, 299, 309, 310.
 Martino, Giov. di, 368.
 Martin IV., Pope, bans, Venice, 114.
 Martino, S., 389.
 Mascoli, chapel of the, 238.
 — Guild of the, 304 (note).
 Master of the Soldiers, 12.
 Marziale, Marco, 251, 333.
 Marziale, S., 403.
 Massegne, the, 227, 306, 307, 375, 377, 369, 395.
 Mater Domini, S. M., 408.
 Memo, Pietro, Doge, 34.
 Merceria, 130, 274.
 Messina, Ant. da, 245, 348, 404.
 Michelozzo, 227, 238.
 Michieli, Dom., Doge, 51, 305, 365.
 Michieli, Vitale, Doge, 47; his triumph, 53; his tomb, 54.
 Michieli II., Vitale, Doge, 54.
 Miracoli, S. M. dei, 373.
 Mocenigo, Alvise, 370.
 — Giov., Doge, 370.
 — Pietro, 370.
 — Tomaso, Doge, 167, 168, 181, 315, 368.
 Moise, S., 394.
 Molo, the, 272, 352, 388.
 Montagna, Bart., 333.
 Morea, the, loss of, 183.
 Moretto, 388.
 Moro, Cristoforo, Doge, 184.
 Moro, Giov., 242.
 Moro, Il., 186, 192, 195 (note), 196.
 Moro, Il, painter, 336.
 Moroni, 354.
 Morosini, faction, 34.
 Morosini, Francesco, his defence of Candia, 220; his victories in the Morea, 220; elected Doge, 220; death, 221; his house, 395.
 — Marin, Doge, 94, 95, 96.
 — Michele, Doge, 162, 369.
 Mortar, House of the, 131, 132.
 Mosaicists, Greek, at Venice, 236, 237.
 Murano, 425-428.
 Murano, Andrea da, 330.
 — Quirizio da, 330.
 Murzuphles, 78, 306.

N.

Napoleon, at Venice, 225.
 Narses, 8, 9.
 Negropont, loss of, 184.
 Negroponte, Ant., 385.
 Nicholas, St., discovery and translation of body of, 47, 48.
 Nicolo, Piero di, 368.
 Nomenclature, streets, 274; waterways, 274.
 Norfolk, Duke of, 295.

O.

Oath, Coronation, 89, 94, 111, 166.
 Obelerio, Doge, 17.
 Oligarchy, era of, 125.
 Olivolo, see of, 15.
 — St Pietro di, 21.
 Orfano, canal, 20.
 Orto, S. Giac. dell', 411.
 Orseolo, Otho, Doge, 39.
 — Pietro, Doge, 33.
 — II., Pietro, Doge, 35; his great reign, 38.
 — ostracised, 40.
 Orso, Doge, 12.
 Orto, S. M. dell', 402.
 Othello, his identity, 184 (note).
 Otho II., attack on Venice by, 34.
 Otho III., his visit to Venice, 37.

P.

Padua, war with, 142.
 — won by Venice, 164.
 — loss of, 203.
 — regained, 204.
 — University of, 215.
 Paduans, humiliation of, 87.
 Pala d'Oro, 50, 307.
 Palace, Ducal, 37, 228 (note), 313, 326.
 — Royal, 326.
 Palazzo Balbi, 354.
 — Barbaro, 362.
 — Barbarigo, 353.
 — Battaglia, 356.
 — Bembo, 359.
 — Businelli, 355.
 — Camerlenghi, 355.
 — Capello-Layard, 354.
 — Cavalli, 362.
 — Cavallini, 361.

General Index

- Palazzo, Contarini, 353, 361.
— Contarini-Fasan, 362.
— Corner Ca' Grande, 362.
— Corner della Regina, 356.
— Corner Spinelli, 361.
— Dario, 353.
— Donà, 355.
— Durazzo, 353.
— Erizzo, 358.
— Farsetti, 361.
— Ferro, 362.
— Fini, 362.
— Foscari, 359.
— Giovanelli, 403.
— Giustiniani, 354, 362.
— Grassi, 362.
— Grimani, 234, 354, 361.
— Grimani della Vida, 358.
— Gritti, 362.
— Labia, 421.
— Loredan, 360.
— Manin, 359.
— Manzoni, 353.
— Mengaldo, 355.
— Michieli delle Colonne, 359. ●
— Mocenigo 361.
— Moro-Lin, 361.
— Morosini, 356.
— da Mula, 353.
— Papadopoli, 355.
— Persico, 354.
— Pesaro, 235, 356.
— Pisani, 354.
— Priull, 356.
— Querini, 355.
— Rezzonico, 235, 353.
— Sangredo, 358.
— Saibante, 355.
— Tiepolo, 354, 362.
— Tron, 356.
— Vendramin, 358.
— Venier, 353.
Paleologus, Michael, 98, 100.
Palladio, Andrea, 234, 280, 328, 364, 385, 418.
Palma, Giovane, 266, 324, 325, 340, 349, 366, 401.
Palma Vecchio, 254, 335, 340, 366, 367 (note).
Pantaleone, S., 416.
Partecipazio, Angelo, head of provisional government, Doge, 18, 21, 214.
— I., Giov., Doge, 25.
— his career, 25.
— II., Giov., Doge, 26.
— Giustiniani, 22.
Partecipazio I., Orso, Doge, the wise, his career, 26.
— II., Orso, Doge, 27.
Passarovitch, treaty of, 221.
Pasterini, Giac., 241.
Paul V., 213.
Pelestrina, 18, 19, 20, 21.
Pennachi, Girolamo, 258, 398.
— Piero, Maria, 258, 398.
Pepin, defeat of, 20.
Pesaro, Giov., 376.
Petrarch, at Venice, 146, 153, 154.
— his house, 388.
Piazza, the, 274, 277, 278.
Piazzetta, columns in, 97.
— the, 316.
Pietà, S. M. della, 388.
Pietra di Bando, the, 97.
Pietro, S., in Volta, 433.
Pinete, 9.
Piombi the, their situation, 139, 240 (note).
Pirates, defeat of, 35.
Pisani, Vettore, 147, 154; imprisoned, 156; released, 158; his daring strategy, 159; death, 160; statue of, 160 (note), 389.
Pisano, Andrea, 227.
Pisano, Vittore, painter, 244.
Pisans, attack Venetians, 47.
Pola, defeat of Venetians at, by Genoese, 155.
Polesine, the, won by Venice, 188.
Polo, Marco, 118, 119; his house, 391, 394.
— S., 417.
Ponte, Ant. da, 315, 320, 354, 355.
— Nic. da, Doge, 216.
— Paradiso, 366.
Popes and Emperors, their hostility, 11, 12, 92.
— reconciliation of, 61.
Pordenone, 258, 339, 340, 381, 382, 406.
Porti, the, 2.
Pozzo, L. dal, 241, 287.
Pozzi, the, their situation, 138.
Previtali, Andrea, 258, 322, 334, 421.
Printing at Venice, 268.
Prisoners, careful treatment of, 111.
Procuratie Nuove, 234, 235, 276.
— Vecchie, 276.
Procurators, their duties, 236 (note).
Providence, vote of, 85.
Pugni, Ponte dei, 412.

Q.

Quarantia, the, 123.
Quirini, Casa, 130, 132.

R.

Ravenna, capture of, 12; won by Venice, 174; occupied, 199.
Redentore, the, 233, 234, 418.
Rialto, 4; concentration at, 18; becomes capital, 21.
— the, 405.
— Bridge, 274, 355, 359.
— S. Giac. di, 5, 405.
Riccio, Andrea, 229.
— Ant., 181, 229, 315, 318, 376.
Ridotto, the, 224, 362.
Riva degli Schiavoni, 387.
Rizzo, see Riccio.
Robbia, Luca della, 307.
Rocco, S., 381.
Romagna, occupation of, 199.
Rome, quarrel with, 212-214.
Rovigo, won by Venice, 188.
Ruskin, 279, 302, 319, 332, 336, 350, 365, 368, 371, 373, 375, 376, 379, 381, 408, 412, 414, 420, 422.

S.

Sabbas, St, 96.
Saccardo, 242, 243.
Sailors, their songs, 128 (note).
Salandrini, 242.
Salinguerra Taurallo, 432.
Salute, S. M. della, 235, 352, 396.
Salvatore, S., 390.
Sanmichele, 233, 358, 361.
Sansovino, Jacopo, 232, 307, 354, 359, 362, 364, 385, 386, 390, 398.
Santa Croce, Fr. da, 257, 386.
Santa Croce, Fr. di Simone da, 257, 426.
— Girolamo da, 257, 386.
Sapienza, battle of, 147.
— Venetian defeat at, 197.
Saracens, defeat of, 52; treaty with, 116.
Sarpi, Paolo, 213-215; statue of, 403; tomb, 425.
Savii, the, 123, 124.
Savoldo, 339.
Scala, Alberto della, 143.
Scala de' Giganti, 229.

Scala, d'Oro, 233.
— Martino della, 141, 142, 143.
Scalzi, S. M. agli, 235, 422.
Scamozzi, Vincenzo, 234, 353, 358, 390.
Scarpagnino, Ant., 229, 318, 359, 379, 406.
Scuola, S. Marco, 230, 231, 373.
Scuola, S. Rocco, 378-381.
Sebastiani, Lazzaro, 250, 334, 341.
— Vicenzio, 238.
Sebastiano del Piombo, 256, 354.
— S., 413.
Selvo, Dom., Doge, 33 (note), 314, 405; his election, 41; his luxurious consort, 42.
Seminario, the, 400.
Senate, 41, 123.
Sforza, Galeazzo, his warning, 185.
— Ludovico, see Il Moro.
Shipping, wise rules relating to, 125.
Ships of war, their origin, 127.
Ships, inspection of, 128.
Shrines, at Venice, 54, 396.
Sicily, expedition to, 92.
Sidon, capture of, 48.
Sighs, Bridge of, 316.
Signory, the, its composition, 123; origin of, 186.
Silk industry, foundation of, 140.
Sixtus IV., bans Venice, 187.
Sophia, S., 83, 297.
Soranza, Giov., Doge, 140.
Southampton, burial vault of Sclavonians at, 128.
Spirito Santo, Lo, 420.
Stae, S., 356.
Steamers, 274.
Stefano, S., 395.
Steno, Michel, 148, 166, 370.
Stephen, St., translation of body of, 50.
Strategopulus, capture of Constantinople by, 99.
Supremacy, mercantile, loss of, 190, 191.
Swabia, Philip of, 75.

T.

Tafi, Andrea, 236.
Tagliapietra, Contessa, 396.
Tarasio, S., translation of body of, 38.

General Index

Fatti, Jac., see Sansovino.
Gen., Council of the, its origin, powers, and election, 124, 133; method of procedure, 134; jurisdiction, 134; penalties, 136; popularity, 137; its capacity, 150; and League of Cambrai, 202; supreme, 210; miscarriage of justice, 217, 290.
Territory, loss of, 198, 210.
Theodore, St., Church of, 8 (note), 9, 33 (note), 306.
Thorns, Crown of, mortgage of, 90; bought by St Louis, 91.
Tiepolo, Giac., Doge, 88, 93, 94; at Siege of Ferrara, 93; his tomb, 93.
— Giac., his patriotism, 115.
— Giov. Batt., 267, 340, 341, 367 (note), 400, 420, 421, 422.
— Lorenzo, at Acre, 96.
— Lorenzo, Doge, election of, 108-110.
Tintoretto, 222, 240, 263-265, 319, 322, 323, 324, 327, 332, 336, 337, 365, 379-382, 398, 401, 402, 403, 404, 408; house of, 403.
— Domenico, 322, 324.
Titian, 222, 240, 247, 254-256, 306, 319, 320, 326, 331, 340, 350, 352, 356, 362, 377, 382, 390, 396, 398, 401, 403, 404, 406, 414; his house, 424.
Tortello, 3, 4; foundation of, 6.
—, island of, 428-430.
Torture chamber, discovery of, 139.
Torture, the, 165 (note).
Tourists, royal, at Venice, 26.
Tradonico, Pietro, Doge, 25; attacks Dalmatian pirates, 25; his murder, 26.
Treviso, festival at, 86; absorption of, 143; regained, 163.
Tribunes, their origin, 8, 9.
Tribuno, Pietro, Doge, 27.
Trieste, siege of, 111.
Tron, Nic., Doge, 376.
Trovato, S., 420.
Tura Cosimo, 347, 411.
Turks, their advance, 182; defeat of, 182; capture Constantinople, 183; conquer the Morea and Epirus, 183; ravage the Friuli and Istria, 185; cession of territory to, 186; defeat Venetian fleet, 197; capture Cyprus, 212;

defeated at Lepanto, 211; conquer Crete, 219, 220.
Tuscan sculpture at Venice, 227.
— artists at Venice, 307.
Tyre, capture of, 53.

U.

Udine, Martino da, 258, 335.

V.

Valier, Bertuccio, Doge, 371.
Valier, Silvestro, Doge, 371.
Vasari, 222, 239, 258, 396.
Vendramin, Andrea, Doge, 368.
Venetian prisoner, devotion of, 157; empire, extent of, 165; republic, end of, 225.
Venetians, origin of, 1, 2; acknowledge suzerainty of Eastern emperor, 9; at siege of Pavia, 14; traffic in slaves, 14; expelled from Ravenna, 15; treaty between, and Emperor Lothair, 26; in Constantinople, 44; their crusading fleets, 47, 48, 51, 52, 53; their honesty and capacity, 92; their patriotism, 101; defeated by Genoese, 117, 146, 147; at siege of Constantinople by Turks, 183 (note); save Rome, 187; laid under ban of church, 129, 187, 202, 213; appeal to Turks, 203.
Veneziano, Ant., 244.
— Lor., 329, 411.
Venice, lagoons of, 2; dogada of, 2; original settlers at, 3; anarchy at, 9; factions at, 13, 15, 17; civil war at, 12, 13; defence of, against Franks, 18 20; growth of arts at, 26; slave trade at, 32; fires at, 32; her rise to power, 35; her territorial gains, 82; her empire, 84; commercial expansion, 88, 91; extent of her trade, 125, 126; humanity to prisoners at, 138, 139; her tolerant rule, 143; her fortitude under disaster, 147, 156, 157, 158; her wise rule, 175; her waning power, 182; abandoned by her allies, 184; humiliation of, 195, 204, 208; naval revival of, 219; her end as European power, 221; her

General Index

- moral decay, 224; plagues at, 221; pomp and splendour of, 221-224.
- Venier, Ant. Doge, 162, 370.
— Sebastian, at Lepanto, 210; Doge, 212.
- Verona, Venetians at, 143.
— won by Venice, 164.
— homage of, 166.
- Veronese. Paolo, 265, 320, 322, 324, 330, 336, 337, 401, 412, 413, 414.
- Verrocchio, 373.
- Vespers, Sicilian, 114.
- Vicenza, won by Venice, 164.
- Villehardouin, his history of fourth crusade, 67; speaks in St Mark's, 69.
- Visconti, Filippo, 167, 169.
— Galeazzo, 163, 164.
- Vitale, S., 395.
- Viti, Timoteo, 410.
- Vito (Vio). S., church of, 133, 396.
- Vittoria, Aless., 233, 354, 375, 383, 400, 402.
- Vivarini, Alvise, 245, 347, 348, 371, 377, 388, 418.
— Ant., 244, 350, 383, 416, 421.
— Bart., 244, 347, 348, 371, 377, 389, 395, 410.

W.

- Woods, Joseph, his criticism of Venetian architecture, 279, 280.
- Wotton, Sir Hy., at Venice, 214, 217.

Z.

- Zaccaria, church of, 21, 38, 230, 382.
- Zanipolo, S., 367-372; legend of foundation of, 93.
- Zara, 66, 72, 74, 145, 165.
- Zattere, the, 418.
- Zecca, 364.
- Zeno, Carlo, 155, 156, 160.
— his disgrace, 165.
— Renier, Doge, 96; his firm government and death, 106; his tomb, 371.
— his attack on the Ten, 218.
- Ziani, Pietro, Doge, 84, 307.
— Seb., Doge, 59, 314, 315.
- Zorzi il Santo, Doge, 140.
- Zuccato, Francesco, 239, 240.
— Valerio, 240.
- Zuccati, the, 299.
- Zulian, S., 365.

PRINTED BY
TURNBULL AND SPEARS
EDINBURGH

This book should be returned to the Library on or before the last date stamped below.

A fine of five cents a day is incurred by retaining it beyond the specified time.

Please return promptly.

DEC 22 '67 H
CANCELLED
1735-608

CANCELLED
JUN 6 1971
5753316

APR 23 '68 H
CANCELLED
777

APR 16 '71 H
CANCELLED
320-458

WILL BOOKS
APR 25 1953
CANCELLED
MAY 25 1953
1542886

